NEW CHANCERY ORDERS.

Just published, in 1 vol., price 12s. 6d.,

THE PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY under the ORDERS of MAY, 1846. Edited by JOHN ROGERSON, a Solicitor of the Court.

"Altogether we can recommend the book as supplying a want much felt at this time by every Practitioner in the Court of Chancery. To Articled Clerks preparing for Examinations it will be of great service, as an easy and explanatory elucidation of Orders which have puzzled old and experienced Practitioners."—Law Times, May 22, 1847.

"This is an exceedingly useful, and we doubt not will prove a very popular, work. The book is, indeed, a most valuable adjunct to Smith's or Daniell's Practice."—The Standard, May 26, 1847.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analyses of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 19th, 1846.

BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERR, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner Berr; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Notes.

THE NEW COUNTY COURTS' ACT.
(WESTMINSTER DISTRICT).

IN consequence of the general feeling entertained by the Profession, that directing their personal attention to the conduct of occasional cases before the various Metropolitan County Courts will afford no adequate remuneration for their time and responsibility, whilst it is important that such business should be well and efficiently conducted, the undersigned has made arrangements personally to conduct the cases of suitors before the Westminster County Court, and for which District he will undertake any matters as Agent.

LONDON, JULY 3, 1847.

In this commercial country all questions raised in our courts of law relating to the transfer of property, or of that which is recognized as the representative of property, are of great importance.

For a long period it has been a frequent practice to make promissory notes payable to the maker's own order, and until lately there does not appear to have been a doubt entertained as to the validity of such instruments. But in the case of Flight v. Maclean, (16 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 23), it was contended, and successfully, in the Court of Exchequer, that promissory notes, which derive their negotiable character solely from the stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, must, by that act, be payable to some other person, or to the order of some other person than the maker, otherwise they were invalid. In the more recent case of Wood v. Mytton, (decided last term), however, the Court of Queen's Bench refused to recognize this decision, and held promissory notes, payable to the maker's own order, to be negotiable under the Statute of Anne.

Both of these decisions proceeded on the words of the statute, which we, therefore, give at length. The 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, recites, "Whereas it hath been held that notes in writing, signed by the party who makes the same, whereby such person promises to pay unto any other person, or his order, any sum of money therein mentioned, are not assignable or indorsable over, within the custom of merchants, to any other person, &c., therefore, to the intent to encourage trade and commerce, which will be much advanced if such notes shall have the same effect as inland bills of exchange, and shall be negotiated in like manner, be it enacted, that all notes in writing that shall be made and signed by any person, &c., whereby such person, &c. shall promise to pay to any other person or persons, body politic and corporate, his, her, or their order, or unto bearer, any sum of money mentioned in such note, shall be taken and construed to be, by virtue thereof, due and payable to any such person or persons, body politic and corporate, to whom the same is made payable; and also every such note payable to any person or persons, his, her, or their order, shall be assignable or indorsable over in the same manner as inland bills of exchange are or may be, according to the custom of merchants; and that the person or persons to whom such sum of money is or shall be by such note made payable may maintain an action for the same, in such manner as he, she, or they might do upon any inland bill of exchange, made or drawn according to the custom of merchants, and that any person or persons to whom such note that is payable to any person or persons, his, her, or their order, is indorsed or assigned, or the money therein mentioned ordered to be paid by indorsement thereon, shall and may maintain his, her, or their action for such sum of money either against the person, &c. who signed such note, or against any of the persons that indorsed the same, in like manner as in cases of inland bills of exchange."

We think it is evident, from an attentive consideration of this act, that the intention in passing it was to place promissory notes on the same footing as bills of exchange. The object was to render such notes negotiable, and as it was then and still is the practice to make bills of exchange payable to the drawer or his order, it would seem to require very explicit language to exclude from this act promissory notes payable to the maker's order. There does not appear to be any reason whatever for such exclusion. The words which are used in the statute merely express or describe the general character of the instrument without intending thereby to limit its negotiability.

It would be absurd for a person to promise to pay himself a sum of money, and therefore, in all probability, the Legislature used the words "whereby he shall promise to pay to any other person," in order to describe an instrument, which is made for the purpose of passing money from one person to another, whether by the language on its face or by indorsement.

It will be observed, that the above section contains four distinct clauses; the first describes a promissory note and the person to whom it is payable, extending the preamble by including notes payable to bearer; the second allows "such" note, payable to any person, to be indorsed as a bill of exchange, adopting, by the word "such," the description given in the first clause, except as to the payee, which it extends to "any person;" the third clause enacts, that the payee of such note may sue thereon as on a bill of exchange; and the fourth clause enacts, that "any" person to whom such note, that is, payable to "any" person, is indorsed may sue thereon as in case of bills of exchange.

It was under this last clause that the Court of Queen's Bench, in Wood v. Mytton, held the plaintiff to come, and, therefore, that he was entitled to recover upon a promissory note payable to the maker's own order. The learned judges considered the note to be a promissory note, as described in the first clause, but with a new description of the payee, as allowed by the fourth. The Court upheld such construction, inasmuch as it was consistent with the ordinary meaning of the words, and calculated to promote justice.

In Flight v. Maclean the above construction of the statute was not contended for, and, indeed, the point cannot be said to have been fully argued. In that case the first count of the declaration was on a promissory note made by the defendant, payable to his own order, and indorsed by him to the plaintiff; the second count described this promissory note as payable to bearer, and delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff. On demurrer to the first count, the Court gave judgment for the defendant, but they held his plea to the second count to be bad, and so gave judgment, as to that count, for the plaintiff.

Just published, in 1 vol., price 12s. 6d.,

THE PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY under the ORDERS of MAY, 1845. Edited by JOHN ROGERSON, a Solicitor of the Court.

"Altogether we can recommend the book as supplying a want much felt at this time by every Practitioner in the Court of Chancery. To Articled Clerks preparing for Examination it will be of great service, as an easy and explanatory elucidation of Orders which have puzzled old and experienced Practitioners."—Law Times, May 22, 1847.

"This is an exceedingly useful, and we doubt not will prove a very popular, work. The book is, indeed, a most valuable adjunct to Smith's or Daniell's Practice."—The Standard, May 28, 1847.

LONDON, JULY 10, 1847.

We have seen with regret of late, addressed to the public through the columns of the most widely-circulated daily papers, manifestoes purporting to proceed from Solicitors, the spirit and tendency of which has been to support in that branch of the Profession, hostility and envy towards the Bar, grounded on what are alleged to be the undeserved obscurity and depression of solicitors, and the equally undue exaltation and pampering of the Bar.

THE JURIST holds itself to be the leading organ, not of the Bar or of Solicitors, but of the Legal Profession; and we are not, therefore, going to flatter either branch at the expense of the other, but to point out to those members of each branch who have not the sense to see it for themselves, that, if they must have professional jealousies and dissensions, they would do more wisely to keep them to themselves, and to enjoy in peace and quietness their propensities for hatred and envy, instead of obtruding them upon a public, which will be too apt to fan the flame, on the principle of divide et impera, and to stigmatise the combatants as Arcades ambo, id est. . . . We forbear to quote the remainder of the English poet's line.

But we should go further, and suggest to those of each branch of the Profession who think that the world treats them unfairly with reference to the other, that the whole position of each branch of the Profession is so distinct from that of the other, that no comparison can be properly instituted between them; and that it is idle for attornies, as a class, to complain that barristers, as a class, are ranked above them, and marked out in preference to them for public employments; or for barristers, as a class, to complain that attornies, as a class, acquire wealth with less labour, and labour of a less intellectual kind, than barristers do.

The two classes devote themselves to different pursuits, and have, therefore, different aptitudes and different rewards. The attorney puts himself in communication with the totally unlearned laity; his occupation is to transact all the routine of ordinary legal business; to hear the stories of the wrongs of mankind told in every variety of style, from the terse and ledger-like enumeration of the merchant, down to the gossip of the elderly maiden lady; to negotiate personally between men of all classes, heated by all manner of bad passions, and mystified by all manner of misconceptions; to talk with clients; to correspond with clients; to superintend all the details of business; to direct clerks; to run from court to court, and from office to office; to do in fact everything except calmly and quietly peruse papers and consult books. Is it wonderful that a man so employed should, if gifted with moderate penetration, acquire great knowledge of men and their tempers; or that, unless gifted with preternatural intellect and memory, he should fail to acquire profound or accurate legal knowledge? The barrister, on the other hand, sees, in the course of his professional occupations, none but men possessing at least some legal knowledge and skill. His time is not frittered away with correspondence and visits, and routine business; his disposition to study is not only not checked by finding it interfere with his execution of his ordinary business, but is, on the contrary, of necessity cultivated by the very exigencies of his professional occupation. He is never employed but upon difficulties,—all the dross that surrounds and entangles a case when it first finds its way into an attorney's office, is carefully cleared away before it is laid upon the barrister's table; and is it wonderful that a man so occupied should acquire greater learning, greater intellectual acumen, and a higher and more thoughtful tone of mind than one whose mental activity is expended in the transaction of a multiplicity of trivialities?

As are the occupations, so are the rewards; and he who has chosen either path, ought not to repine because he has not the advantages of both. We take it to be beyond question, that if competence within a reasonable period be the thing desired, the profession of the attorney should be selected. There are few men in that branch who, with the most ordinary share of worldly advantages and connexion, and with industry and good conduct, cannot obtain a professional income adequate to support a gentleman, in five years; while we think we may say with equal confidence, that there are very few barristers who can. The skillful attorney is thinking of retiring with a tolerable fortune, at an age when the barrister of proportionate estimation in his department, is but beginning to be talked of as a rising man. True it is, that a few of the highest offices in the state are always filled by successful barristers, and that a good many public employments of a lesser grade are usually reserved for the Bar. True it is, also, that the barrister receives somewhat more of honour at the hands of the world than the attorney. But this is only a set-off to his receiving less of worldly wealth. In truth, the barrister struggles for fame and position, as his reward, and sometimes he gets them. If he does not obtain early wealth, he should not complain, for that is not one of the things allotted to him. On the other hand, the accessible reward of the attorney is wealth, or, at least, early competence; and if he obtains that, he should not complain, because he does not also win honours and rank. In fine, let each branch justly estimate its position, and not repine, because, having fixed its aim upon one object, it does not attain another. So let each branch abstain from indulging in feelings of animosity or envy towards the other. Both are important classes of society, and each has duties and responsibilities so great, that, duty to fulfil them, will entitle it to the respect of the public, while nothing will so much lower both branches of the Profession in the eyes of the public, as their indulging in open vituperation or concealed sarcasm against each other.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE 39TH OF THE GENERAL ORDERS IN CHANCERY OF 1841.

(Concluded from p. 254).

We pursue the subject commenced in THE JURIST of the 26th ultimo, for the purpose of adding to our discussion upon the doubt there raised, the result of the cases on the other points, which have been matter of doubt and of decision. But first, we must correct an error in our former paper, which crept into it from its having escaped our memory that since Calvert v. Gandy, the case of Medhurst v. Allison (4 Hare, 479) has been decided, in which, under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 105, the Court thought itself at liberty to permit a cause to be set down upon an objection for want of parties after the fourteen days, the delay being accounted for.

Whether this decision will be followed may be open to question. The 4 Viet. c. 94, and 4 & 5 Viet. c. 52, under which the 39th Order of 1841 was made, gives to orders made under those acts the same force and effect as if their provisions had been enacted by Parliament.

The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 105, repeals those two acts, and after prolonging the time during which they gave power to the Court of Chancery to make general orders under them, enacts, (Sect. 2), "That all rules, orders, and regulations made and to be hereafter made under the provisions of the said recited acts, and this act or any of them, shall for all purposes be deemed and taken to be general rules and orders of the High Court of Chancery." Neither this section nor any other section of the act expressly repeals those parts of the two former acts which give to the rules made pursuant to them the force of acts of Parliament, and it may, therefore, be contended, that all that the 8 & 9 Vict. intended, was, not to diminish the force of the rules made under the preceding acts, but merely to add to them a force which possibly they might not have without. The language of the clause is, not that the Court shall have any greater powers than it had under the preceding acts, but that orders made under the several acts, by virtue of which they are to be binding on the Court as if they were acts of Parliament, shall be for all purposes deemed and taken to be general orders. Now, the capability of being treated as nullities, is not a quality of general orders belonging to them as such. The principle of their flexibility, if it may be so termed, is the power of the Court to regulate its own proceedings at all times, and therefore its right not to be bound by any orders which it may have made. In other words, orders are not rescindable simply because they are general orders, but because the Court cannot be bound by any orders that it makes; and orders may have a force given to them by a power superior to the Court, to bind the Court, and yet be general orders. The quality therefore of general orders, impressed by the 2nd section of the 8 & 9 Vict. upon the orders made under it, and the preceding acts, is not at all (it may be argued) inconsistent with the authority expressly given to them by the 4th and 4 & 5 Viet., and not expressly repealed by the 8 & 9 Vict., to bind the Court as if they were acts of Parliament.

We pass now to the points that have been the subject of decision upon the 39th Order of 1841.

One is, that, upon a hearing of the cause, upon objections for want of parties, the answer is, for the purpose of such hearing only, taken to be true. (Richardson v. Larpent, 2 You. & C. 507). The hearing is, in fact, in the nature of a hearing upon a plea, the answer suggesting (whether by way of admission of the facts alleged by the bill, or by way of additional suggestion, is immaterial) upon which it asks the opinion of the Court, whether, in that state of things, the suit is not defective for want of parties. In this view, the defendants ought to have the right to begin. On that point, however, the decisions are conflicting. In Bradstock v. Whalley, (9 Bess. 451), it was contended, that, the objection being raised by the defendants, they have a right to begin in the same way as upon a plea or demurrer for want of parties; but the Court ruled that the plaintiff has a right to begin. In Richardson v. Larpent, the defendant began; in The Attorney-General v. Gardner, (2 Coll. C. C. 504), the same practice prevailed; in Bigg v. Pann, (9 Jur. 363), the plaintiff began. Upon principle, we submit, that the defendant ought to be allowed to begin. The objection is his; and it is, as we have suggested, an objection in the nature of a plea. The defendant is, on the particular occasion, the attacking party, and, if he does not begin, how is the Court to be assured that the case will not be opened on a misconception of the real grounds of objection?

Another point discussed has been, what is a sufficient suggestion by the answer of want of parties. There can, of course, be no doubt, when the answer distinctly insists that certain persons are necessary parties. But in Bigg v. Pann, the objection was taken in the form of a general submission. The answer admitting and stating various facts, submitted whether all proper parties were before the Court; and it was contended that this was not a sufficient suggestion. But the Court held otherwise. And considering, that it is the settled rule to consider a submission by a defendant whether he has a right, as equivalent, for the purpose of raising the question, to insisting that he has such right, one is more surprised that it should have been contended in Bigg v. Penn., that the cause was not properly set down under the 39th Order of 1841, than that it should have been decided that it was.

With regard to costs, when the Court is quite clear that the objection is tenable, it will allow it with costs. But the general practice is not to make any order as to costs, but to reserve them.

The Law and Practice of Patents and Registration of Designs, with the Pleadings and all the necessary Forms. By SIDNEY BILLING, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, and ALEXANDER PRINCE, of the Office for Patents of Inventions, &c., Lincoln's-inn-fields. 8vo., pp. 227. [Bensing.]

A Treatise on the Principles relating to the Specification of a Patent for Inventions, showing the Standard by which the Sufficiency of that Instrument is to be tried. By WILLIAM SPENCE, Assoc. Inst. C. E., Patent Agent. 8vo., pp. 182. [Stevens & Norton.]

Copyright of Designs, as distinguished from Patentable Inventions. By WILLIAM SPENCE. 8vo., pp. 32.

"Of the office for patents," &c. merely means, that Mr. Prince is a patent agent, being a modest inversion of the truth, which is, that, instead of Mr. Prince being a mere humble appurtenant "of or belonging to" the office, the office appertains to Mr. Prince, as his chattel or demesne, as the case may be. A pair of folding-doors, with large zinc plates bearing the words "Office for Patents," are much affected by gentlemen in this line of business, with the design, we suppose, of giving their chambers a status in the estimation of the learned, superior to that of the unpretending retreat of the Attorney or Solicitor-General for the time being. We should leave this grandiloquent style to our French neighbours, who have a genius for it, and among whom a scavenger may call himself "artiste en boue" without impropriety or singularity. The book is intended, the Preface tells us, to be useful to three classes, viz. lawyers, patent agents, and patentees. With its operation as an advertisement, in aid of the zinc plate, we have nothing to do. We hope it may be successful, for Mr. Prince may be an excellent patent agent, though he does not shine as an author. The qualifications of a patent agent are twofold—knowledge of the practice and knowledge of the history and details and the records of inventions and patents in this country. The first head of information is of the simplest description; the second is so extensive, that it is never completely mastered by any individual. Its use is, of course, to secure inventors, as far as possible, from wasting their money in obtaining patents for inventions which are not novel. If the agent undertakes the responsible task of settling the title of the patent and the specification, he must also possess a knowledge of the legal requisites to a good title and a good specification, and perspicacity; which latter gift will be of little use, unless its possessor is well versed in the principles of mechanical and chemical science. Whether all these qualifications are combined in Mr. Prince, it is not for us to inquire; certainly, he has not exercised his power of clear exposition, if he possess it, in the work before us, nor has he exhibited much depth of scientific knowledge. We are sorry to be obliged to add, that Mr. Billing in no way makes amends for Mr. Prince's deficiencies. He refers to all the statutes and material cases, it is true, but his statement of principles is seldom clear, frequently not intelligible, and sometimes not correct. Incoherences of expression, such as the following, occur too often to be always attributable to the printer:—

"A patent is a grant from the sovereign, and, until the reign of King John, was named therein in the 'singular number.'" (P. 2).

"A principle is an arbitrary assumption or the result of known attributes, and which is or are adopted as a general rule for effecting any particular object or thing, or arriving at any definite conclusion on any subject, as, all men are presumed to know the law— as, metal is opaque, dense, and ductile, [e. g. potassium, bismuth]—such are principles; but such untrue or general propositions cannot be received when applied to manufactures or arts, nor could such a principle form the subject-matter of a patent. The first being unreasonable, (in strictness); the last too general, for it is clear law, that the subject of every grant must be certain and defined." (P. 27).

"When a patent is obtained for the invention of a method only, (i. e. of an engine, instrument, or organ to be used for the accomplishment of some purpose), it is not borne out by saying a coffee roaster, or anything by which the grain may be kept in motion and turned, may be used." (P. 32).

"Gibson v. Brand has clearly shewn that the mere alteration in the order of the manner of doing a thing with known ingredients, or leaving out a part of the known process, is insufficient to be the subject-matter of a patent." (P. 34). [If so, what is shewn by Russell v. Conley, 1 C., M., & R. 875?]

"The title of a patent, from the great importance of its object, and as being opposed to the common right, is a matter which should be construed with the greatest strictness, for it is only by such a mode of construction the ingenious mechanic or fortunate discoverer (and the public) are protected in that which is, on the one hand, the produce of his ingenuity and skill, and on the other, though resulting in accident, the adaptation of a chance to a particular use, through analogy and the quickness of intellect." (P. 72).

"When the licenses are granted by deed (i. e. by agreement in writing under seal) the doctrine of estoppel applies, and a person would not be allowed to disavow so solemn an act." (P. 136).

We take Mr. Spence's work also to be intended as an advertisement. He says, he "has thought fit to assume that the real questions relating to patents resolve themselves into questions connected with the specification. Accordingly the aim of the present work is to point out to patentees the kind of standard by which the sufficiency of this important instrument is tried, with a view of shewing them how much their own interests depend upon its due preparation. The writer wishes it to be particularly observed, that the work is not submitted as a guide to the practice of drawing specifications, it simply proposes to illustrate certain operative, as distinguished from abstract, principles, which enter into the consideration of the general question relating to the specification." In short, the author's design is to advise his readers to take advice. He has however gone far beyond his design in the execution of it, and has not only given a catalogue of the rocks and shoals which the patentee has to encounter in his passage from Somerset House to the Enrolment Office, but furnishes him with an accurate chart and safe rules of navigation.

The subject (which, with the exception of the little that may be said as to the title of the patent, includes everything relating to patent law that can be usefully studied by a layman) is treated in a popular style, somewhat too diffusely, but, on the whole, with perspicuity and accuracy. Little or no novelty is to be found, or could be expected in Mr. Spence's essay, because the recent writers on the law of patents (Messrs. Webster, Sweet, and Hindmarsh) have gone very fully into the requisites to a specification, and have cited all the authorities. Mr. Spence, with a different object, has pursued a different course. He has not encumbered his pages with references to reports which his readers would never consult,—but has selected and stated two or three leading cases, and explained and illustrated the principles involved in them, as well as those directly established by them, in a lucid and ingenious commentary.

The following observations on the claim in a specification afford a fair specimen of the author's style:—

"We now come to that part of the specification, which, in a sense, may be said to be the most important of all,—the part referred to is the claim. It is here that the essence, principle, or spirit of the invention is stated in the most distinct terms. The whole of the foregoing matter is here summed up and resolved into its one idea. All the previous description of circumstance comes now to be seen only as affording a clue to the right of interpretation of this final definition of the essential character of the invention. The claim, rightly understood, is in fact the specification, but then, in order that it may be rightly understood, reference must be had to the antecedent matter; and it may, indeed, be said, that the intelligibility of the whole specification greatly depends upon the particular interpretation of the claim which is suggested by such reference. It would be comparatively easy to discover what construction is to be put upon the claim, provided all the former portions of the specification plainly referred to the main idea contemplated by the invention, but such construction becomes a difficult matter when inconsistencies are found to exist on a comparison of some statements with others. So far as difficulties of this kind can be overcome, they are sometimes obviated by stating the claim first in a negative form. It is well to calculate upon every objection being raised to the specification that human ingenuity can devise, and accordingly it may be foreseen, that the true distinct nature of the invention is left open to misconstruction by a mere statement of what it is, since it may appear to be not only that, but something more also, (probably of a prejudicial character), unless guarded from such construction by a suitable negation. This course is particularly advisable when the patent is for a new combination of materials or processes, which in their separate form are old or not open to be claimed. Crane's patent is a case in point."

In speaking of the invalidity of a patent by reason of prior public uses of the invention, Mr. Spence has either committed a great mistake, or has expressed himself very unfortunately. He says,—

"Suppose an individual to discover and put in practice by way of trial, some novel and useful machine or process; unless he used his invention in public, he might take out a patent for it; but if he chose to forego this advantage, and make it public, then the circumstance of his doing so in a manner by which competent witnesses could understand the true practical nature of the invention, would leave no room for another to take out a patent for the same thing, on the plea of making a disclosure in terms of the principle contained therein. Whether the former were sensible of its real value or not, would be immaterial, inasmuch as the most accurately drawn specification could give the public no more than he had given them, viz. a prac*tical intelligible view, for the first time, of the essence or substance of the matter."*

This is true, so far as it goes, but, by stating that as material, which is perfectly immaterial, omits and impliedly excludes a part of the truth. It is perfectly settled law, that the public use of an invention, i. e. the use of the invention, and the public sale of its produce, is sufficient to invalidate a subsequent patent, although the method of practising the invention is kept a secret. (Wood v. Zimmer, Holt, 58; Townsend's Patent, Davis' Pat. Cas. 429).

Mr. Spence has some observations on the question of what amounts to publication in a printed book, which, if they do not resolve, at least fully disclose the difficulties which it involves. But when, in the next division of his essay, he treats of publication by a former specification, we do not so readily follow him. After stating the whimsical presumption of law, that the contents of the Enrolment Office are perused by an intelligent public with as much assiduity and interest as The Times or Punch, Mr. Spence properly concludes, "that knowledge and the means of knowledge are held to be the same thing as respects the contents of a specification." If he had stopped here, he would have said all, we believe, that principle or authority suggests on the point; and we are at a loss to understand what follows:—"But that in applying this principle to practical cases, it is easy to see that the question mainly turns upon the legal sufficiency of the said specification, so that although evidence of public knowledge and public use is not required (as we have seen) in principle, yet, in practice, it is found essential, from its bearing upon the question; for if the description of an invention contained in an enrolled specification be unintelligible or impracticable, there is no disclosure of a perfected invention. Now, public user and non user are some evidence of this," &c. Surely, if it is presumed that the contents of the specification are known, because they are on record, the question must always be, not whether the specification was valid or not, but whether it plainly disclosed the substance of the subsequent patent.

The little pamphlet on the Copyright of Designs contains the acts under which designs, whether ornamental or not, (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65), are registered, and an analysis of them; but its principal object is to discuss a question on which we have, on a former occasion, offered some remarks, viz. whether the use of a principle of construction, or a mechanical invention, can at all, and if at all, to what extent, be secured by registration under the latter act. His conclusion is thus expressed:—

"It appears, from the foregoing observations on both acts, that the following points are established:—The protection of copyright in designs at first had reference only to ornamenting a very limited number of articles of manufacture, then it was extended to various other articles specified under different classes, and eventually to designs for articles of manufacture, having reference to some purpose of utility as distinguished from mere ornament. But, looking at this order in the growth of this kind of legal protection, there is no evidence to shew, that, in extending its applicability from ornamental to useful designs, the original notion of a design (or formation of parts) was to be superseded, and the idea of an invention (or principle of construction) substituted. Hence, to say the least, it is extremely doubtful whether any of the numerous mechanical inventions which have been registered have that kind of legal protection which their authors intended to secure."

We do not think that this is a correct statement of the case, or of the difficulty, which resides, we conceive, not in the law, but in the nature of its object. The Legislature, in offering protection for designs, must be understood to have intended substantial protection, and, therefore, there can be no doubt that a colourable variation of a registered ornamental design, producing substantially the same ornamental effect by substantially the same means, would be a piracy; and so a colourable variation of a registered design for an article of utility, producing the useful effect by a configuration not exactly, but substantially, the same as that registered, would be a piracy; and every variation from the pattern actually registered in a particular immaterial to the useful effect, would be deemed a colourable variation. Thus, if a pattern of the well-known coupling for railway carriages, which consists of a double screw working in two nuts, and prevented from turning by a loaded pendulum, had been registered with a spherical weight at the end of the pendulum, the copyright could not have been evaded by using a cylindrical or cubical weight,—that part of the pattern being immaterial to the useful effect. So, the copyright of a registered riding bit of a peculiar form would be protected from evasion by mere variations of form or ornament in unessential parts. Hence we conclude that the benefit of a mechanical invention may be secured by registration, wherever the essence of the invention is, the form of the whole, or of a part or parts of a thing, or the form and formal arrangement of a thing consisting of several movable parts; and that such inventions as those of a chisel, a saw, a lathe, a lifting pump, the dead beat, recoil, and cylinder escapements of clocks and watches, &c., might, if they had been made after the passing of the stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 45, have been protected under its provisions.

The New County Courts Act for Debts, Damages, Replevin, &c.; together with the Rules of Practice and Forms, with Notes Critical and Explanatory; including Decisions in the Courts of England and Ireland on Statutes having similar Enactments. Third Edition. By HENRY UDALL, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

[London: Stevens & Norton.]

This work having been already noticed in THE JURIST on the appearance of the First Edition, we do not think it necessary to make any further remarks upon the mode in which Mr. Udall has performed his task. We call, however, the attention of our readers to the following observations which occur in it (at p. 166) upon a subject of considerable practical importance, viz. what is to be done to shew that a plaintiff is entitled to costs in cases within the concurrent jurisdiction clause of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95:—

“First,” says Mr. Udall, “How is the verdict to be taken by the associate? Is it to be in the usual way, with the usual nominal costs, or is the verdict to be taken for the amount of the verdict only? The material question, however, is, is the plaintiff entitled to his full costs as a matter shewn by the postea itself, or must he do something more to entitle himself to costs? If he be not entitled to costs as a matter of course, what must he do? Must he apply to the court specially for costs, shewing that the case is within the concurrent jurisdiction clause, or must he enter a suggestion on the postea to that effect? Whether he be entitled to costs as a matter of course seems to depend upon the construction of the two sections, (128 and 129), taken together. And this depends upon the answer to be given to the question, to what extent is the Statute of Gloucester repealed by the present act? By the Statute of Gloucester, and the liberal interpretation that has been put upon it, the plaintiff, if he succeed in his action, is entitled to full costs. Now, in what cases is this right interfered with by the present statute? By the concurrent jurisdiction clause, a plaintiff has the option to proceed in certain actions therein mentioned as if the present act had not been passed. The concurrent jurisdiction clause, therefore, does not take away the right given by the Statute of Gloucester to full costs, but, on the contrary, impliedly gives the costs. What, then, is the effect of the next section, (sect. 129)? That enacts, ‘That, if any action shall be commenced after the passing of this act in any of her Majesty’s superior courts, for any cause other than those lastly hereinbefore specified, for which a plaint might have been entered in any court holden under this act, and a verdict shall be found for the plaintiff for a sum less than 20*l.* if the said action is founded on contract, or less than 5*l.* if it be founded on tort, the said plaintiff shall have judgment to recover such sum only and no costs.’ This section, therefore, seems to leave the question of costs where it was before, so far as it relates to actions to which the concurrent jurisdiction clause is applicable; for the section only applies to actions for any cause other than those lastly hereinbefore specified; the specified clause being those mentioned in the concurrent jurisdiction clause. This being so, there does not appear to be any general enactment repealing the Statute of Gloucester as to costs where the verdict is under 20*l.* in an action founded on contract, or 5*l.* in an action founded on tort. If this be so, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from obtaining his full costs by force of the postea itself. Had there been an enactment taking away costs in such cases generally, and the causes specified in the concurrent jurisdiction clause had been excepted from its operation, the question as to costs would have been entirely altered. Then the postea, without anything more, instead of shewing that the plaintiff was entitled to costs, would have shewn the contrary,—that is to say, that he was not entitled to them. It would then have been necessary for the plaintiff to have entered a suggestion on the postea shewing that his case came within the actions specified in the concurrent jurisdiction clause, for then the burden of costs would have to be shifted, and where that is to be done a suggestion is necessary, as pointed out by Parke, B., in Maberley v. Titterton, (7 Mee. & W. 542). In such case the right to costs would have been the same as under Lord Denman’s Act, (3 Vict. c. 24, s. 3); the 2nd section of which statute, having taken away the right to costs generally, where the plaintiff recovers less than 40*s.* damages in actions of trespass and trespass on the case, unless a certificate be given, the plaintiff, if he have a right to costs because his case is within the exception of the 3rd section, must have a suggestion entered on the postea for that purpose, as decided by the Court of Common Pleas in Bowyer v. Cook, (11 Jur. 333).

“The result of the above note is this—that the Statute of Gloucester gives costs to a successful plaintiff generally; the concurrent jurisdiction clause continues his right to sue in the superior courts; then the restriction clause takes away costs from the plaintiff in a large class of other cases, but does not operate upon the cases specified in the concurrent jurisdiction clause. This throws the burden on the defendant to shew that the case is not within the concurrent jurisdiction clause; and to take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Gloucester, he must make that fact appear on the record. But this construction leads to a much wider operation than cases within the concurrent jurisdiction clause. How is the Master, on taxation, to be informed by the postea that the cause is one for which a plaint might have been entered under this act?”

“The Master can have no judicial knowledge of the fact that a plaint might have been entered in the county court, for that depends upon the circumstances of the particular case—whereas his knowledge must be from the record itself. Besides, the present statute is to be put into operation by orders in Council. Can the taxing Master notice, that orders in Council for that purpose have been issued? and if he can, and it were apparent to him that the act was universally in operation, which is not in fact so, the objection still arises that it cannot appear from the postea, without anything more, that the case was within the jurisdiction of the county court. It therefore appears to me that in all cases, before a plaintiff can be deprived of his costs—the burden lies on the defendant to show that the particular case was one in which a plaintiff could have been entered in the county court. Whichever way the Courts shall hereafter determine—whether they decide that it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that he is entitled to his costs, or whether they determine that it is for the defendant to show that he is not entitled to them—there seems no doubt, that, when the general question is settled, the mode of raising the point in each particular case must be by stating the facts by way of suggestion on the record; for it is not a question as to amount of costs, but as to the right to costs. The rule on this subject is clearly stated in the written judgment of the Court of Exchequer, in Watson v. Quilter, (11 Moo. & W. 767). The Court there says, ‘The amount of costs, it is true, is a matter wholly within the province of the Court to determine in those cases where a party is entitled to them. But the right to costs is given by the statute law. Where the amount merely depends upon a fact which it is unnecessary to notice on the record,—as, for instance, where a successful plaintiff or defendant is entitled to double costs,—the Court may award them on the taxation; but where the right of any costs is in question, and depends upon a fact the determination of which is not by the statute law vested in the Court, and which must be stated on the record to justify the award of costs contrary to the usual course, the fact, if the opposite party insists upon it, ought to be tried by a jury!’ It is, therefore, quite clear, that the party on whom the onus is cast to shift the costs, where the facts warrant it, must do so by way of suggestion on the record. If the facts suggested be not disputed, but the party against whom the suggestion is entered denies that any alteration of his right arises from them, he may demur, and raise that point for the opinion of the Court. (Hickman v. Colley, 2 Strange, 1120).”

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

July 7.—Lord Denman, C. J., delivered the judgment of the Court in the following cases:—

- Doe d. Wilkinson v. Goodier*—Rule refused.
Lewis v. Holmes—Rule discharged, with costs.
Boyd v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company—Rule discharged.
Reg. v. Dunn—Rule in arrest of judgment discharged.
Horner v. Debenham—Rule absolute for entering a verdict on the general issue for defendant, and for striking out the damages, and delivering the postea to defendant.
Reg. v. St. George the Martyr, Southwark, in the case of the Bethlehem Hospital—Order confirmed.
Beale v. Moulds—Rule discharged.
Miller v. Dent—Rule discharged.
Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Marton-cum-Grafton—Order confirmed.
Rogers v. Brenton—Rule absolute for nonsuit.
 In the Matter of the Sheffield and Rotherham Banking Company—Rule discharged.
Reg. v. Hunt—Judgment for the Crown.
Halls v. Lee—Judgment for plaintiff.

THE BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY BILL AND THE LOCAL COURTS.

THERE appears to be a sort of fatality attending the subject of the jurisdiction in bankruptcy and insolvency; year after year changes are made that are to work wonders in the way of improvement in that branch of the law, and year after year do the wonders change their colour, and though still wonders, shew themselves to the disappointed public as wonders, not in the way of improvement, but of deterioration. Fourteen years ago, what so popular as the abolition of the bankruptcy commissioners and the Chancery jurisdiction in bankruptcy? A new court, with a new staff, and a whole mass of judicial machinery, extending however its blessings only over a limited portion of the country, was, if we may use so familiar an expression, all the rage, and men wondered how the bankruptcy business of the country could ever have been got through without a Court of Review, as complete and as strong as one of the king's courts of law. Presently, however, the notion grew into favour of extending the subordinate jurisdiction of the commissioners in bankruptcy, and contracting the superior jurisdiction of the Court of Review, and as all know, that court gradually became curtailed of its fair proportions, till the four judges of the Court of Review ceased to be, and the fractional part of a Vice-Chancellor became, practically, the Court of Review. For although there are still two judges of the Court of Review, Sir G. Rose, as is well known, never sits, except when the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce is unable, from illness or otherwise, to attend his court,—a species of occurrence which the practitioners in that court well know to be extremely rare. The next change was laying upon the London commissioners in bankruptcy a large portion of the insolvency business, for what reason it always was extremely puzzling to discover. And now at length it is found out that the Court of Review is altogether a nuisance; that the insolvency business, which is scarcely domesticated in the Bankruptcy Commissioners' Courts, is not fit for them, nor they fit for it; that it should be given back to the commissioners of insolvency; and that the country insolvency business should be transferred to the new county courts. Well might a learned member of the House and of the Chancery Bar, ask in the debate which took place on this subject on the 12th, why the Legislature proceeded piecemeal? one day giving insolvency, another day bankruptcy, another day charities. Looking, also, at what the proposed measure does, and what it does not, well may it be asked what is meant by a mere abolition of the Court of Review by name, when substantially its jurisdiction is retained, and when in fact the only result of the change will be, that the same portion of the same Vice-Chancellor that now constitutes and adjudicates as the Court of Review, nominate the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, will continue in all probability, if the suitors are left free, to sit and adjudicate in bankruptcy in the same matters, under the same rules, and with the same extent of jurisdiction as before, only nominate a Vice-Chancellor. So far as regards any effect to be anticipated from this portion of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill, it might as well propose to enact that Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce should on certain days in the week be called Sir James Lewis Bruce Knight, going on of course to provide that Sir James Lewis Bruce Knight should have, for all bankruptcy purposes, the same powers and authority, &c., as Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce.

With regard to the proposed transfer of the country insolvency business to the local courts, we do not say, that it may not be the commencement of a beneficial change in the administration of the law; for we apprehend, that, with the improvements in the practice of those Courts which experience will no doubt suggest, a large portion of the existing law business of the country will have a tendency to flow into them, and that a want will before long be felt and expressed by the people, to bring their jurisdiction to bear upon a vast quantity of law business for which at present there is no accessible jurisdiction whatever. We allude to business of an equitable character, which we have for a long time contended in this Journal ought, within certain limits, to be placed within the jurisdiction of the local courts. And we have little doubt that before long that view will be taken both in and out of the Houses of Parliament. It is quite impossible that the people, if they find their common-law contracts satisfactorily dealt with by the judges of the county courts, shall not soon begin to ask why their equitable rights and liabilities should not be ascertained by similar tribunals. Trustees and executors, and cestuis que trustent and legatees, will ask why men should be able to recover a debt of 20*l.* in a local court, and be driven to incur personal risk in the administration of an equitable fund of 100*l.*, or to consume it altogether in a suit in the High Court of Chancery.

We are quite sure that our well-judging professional brethren, connected with the business of Chancery, will not think that, in urging these views, we are untrue to the fair interests of that branch of the Profession. We firmly believe, that, to make the local courts courts of equity would not, in any perceptible degree, affect the proper business of the Court of Chancery, but would simply create a new class of equity business; business which is at present not done at all, to the frequent ruin of the parties concerned. It might prevent the filing of a few bills that ought never to have been filed, but that would be all, and that would be a public benefit. If, however, we were satisfied that the effect of such a measure would be to diminish the business of the Chancery practitioners, all we can say is, firstly, that would be but a poor reason for not advocating the plan, if the public interest requires it; and secondly, that the jurisdictional revolution has begun, and nothing can stop it. The Profession may, by judicious and timely acquiescence and assistance, guide it with benefit to the public, and prevent, perhaps, the introduction of those crude schemes devised by laymen alone, which proceed on the absurd notion, that whatever injures lawyers must benefit the public. But the change is, we apprehend, inevitable, and we counsel our brethren not to resist, but to support and direct its march.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Maurice Power, M. D., for the county of Cork, in the room of Daniel O'Connell, Esq., deceased.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—John Walford Cutler, of Sparke Brook, Birmingham; Henry William Whitehead, of Rochdale, Lancashire; James Armitage, of Huddersfield.

Books.

The Law concerning Horses, Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. With an Appendix, containing recent Cases, Statutes, &c. By GEORGE HENRY HEWIT OMPHEANT, B.A., Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Small 8vo., pp. 322. [S. Sweet.]

"Then that mayst fortune to be of myne opinion or condycion to love horses, take hede that thou be not beguiled as I have been a hundred times and more."—Boke of Husbandry, by Sir A. Fitzherbert, Justice of the C. P.

As you recognise the horseman before he has mounted or even gathered up the reins, by the manner of his approaching his animal, so you may often discern the practical merits of a law-book, from the air of its preface (or, still better, from the want of one) and table of contents. An author who has enough of intelligence and tact to acquit himself creditably in arranging and setting forth his work, is sufficiently qualified for writing a useful "practical treatise," and, by the hypothesis, is not likely to commit the folly of undertaking the task, and failing for want of application. There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book before us: it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth. We have not contented ourselves with applying the easy test above alluded to, but have carefully looked into the work, and find that, without any affectation of modesty, the author has barely done himself justice by the following statement in his Preface:—

"The object of the present Treatise is to lay before the Profession and the public in as short and convenient a form as possible the law of contracts concerning horses, whether it be in buying, selling, hiring, or in any other manner dealing with them, to ascertain the liabilities incurred by parties either on "the road" through negligent driving, or in "the field" by riding over the lands of another; also to explain the present state of the law with regard to racing, wagers, and gaming in connexion with the recent alterations effected by the act of Victoria. In the Appendix will be found some very late cases, a few important statutes, and some information which may be found useful for general reference."

"Great care has been taken to keep out all matter that would tend to incumber the book, but the fullest references are given." These references, we may observe, are honestly given as the author has made them, and where he uses, as every one who intends to write usefully on the horse must constantly do, poor Youatt's "popular" but admirable work, he fairly acknowledges his obligation.

In the introductory observations on the giving of warranties there is much sound advice; the result of which is thus summed up:—

"The best rule for a man therefore to follow in selling a horse is this. Where the horse is of no great value, to refuse a warranty altogether, and such a horse is best sold by auction. Where the horse is of great value, if sound, but that appears doubtful, then to let the purchaser be satisfied by a veterinary examination, and so take the responsibility upon himself. When, however, the seller is confident that the horse is perfectly sound, and that with a warranty he would fetch a larger price than without one, he should have him examined and certified as sound, &c. by one or two veterinary surgeons of respectability and experience, and then knowing on what ground he goes, he may take the risk of warranting him sound." (P. xxxvii).

Chapter 1 treats of the contracts of sale and exchange principally with reference to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, and herein of the acceptances and receipt, the earnest and part payment, the note or memorandum in writing, and the signature by the party or his agent, and of Sunday dealing.

Chapter 2 treats of fairs and market overt, the recovery of stolen horses, and the law of auctions and repositories.

Chapter 3 contains a formidable enumeration under an alphabetical arrangement of the different defects which constitute, or do not, legal unsoundness or vice. The definitions or descriptions of the disorders or bad habits are clearly compiled from the modern veterinary authorities, and the legal authorities are appended.

When Mr. Oliphant expounds the authorities on the question of soundness, he makes the matter as clear as if really is; but we do not think he has been so happy in his definition of the term. He says,—

"We may define a horse to be 'sound' when he is in the possession of his natural and constitutional health, and also in such bodily perfection as is consistent with his natural formation."

A definition ought to be the perfection of precision, aptness, and brevity in expression; and yet, if we were asked to select the most inaccurate and least terse sentence in the book, this is the one we should produce. "A horse is sound when he is in the possession of his natural and constitutional health" literally means that state of health which he, the individual horse, possesses, constitutes soundness,—a paralagism, and a proposition which, in the meaning which it was intended to express, that it is sufficient if the animal's health is as good as its natural formation and constitution will allow, is not true, as the cases of unsoundness from congenital malformation or disease (e. g., hereditary blindness, contracted feet, curb, spavin, &c.) abundantly prove. (See Jolly v. Bondell, Ry. & M. 136). The second branch of the definition is in fact a repetition of the first, with a hint of a qualification which is certainly not easy of precise expression. Perhaps the qualification intended may be expressed by saying, that any disease developed or commenced, and capable of detracting in any manner from the usefulness of the animal for any purpose, and any malformation which will necessarily produce such disease in the fair use of the animal, (e. g., contracted hoof, resulting in inflammation of the foot, though the authorities are not consistent here, see Bailey v. Forrest, 2 C. & K. 131, and Gronway v. Marshall, cit. Oliphant, p. 361) is unsoundness. But no merely mechanical defect or disproportion in any part of the animal, (as upright shoulders, heavy forehead, short pastern, &c.), and no constitutional peculiarity not amounting or necessarily tending to disease, (as an irritable watery constitution, &c.), is unsoundness. We do not know, however, that we can improve on Baron Alderson's definition that "the word 'sound' means sound, and the only qualification of which it is susceptible arises from the purpose for which the warranty is given." The fact is, as a learned writer observes, that "definition, difficult in all but the purely abstract sciences, is peculiarly so in a system of living law. To include in a general expression the whole of a number of particulars, which are not only imperfectly ascertained, from their endless variety, caused by distinctions extremely minute, though often very important, but are constantly subjected to the process of being changed and added to, is evidently not merely a difficult but an impossible operation." (Bissett on Estates for Life, p. 14).

To the definition of unsoundness an important practical qualification is annexed by the rule as to Patent Defects, which, as a branch of the general doctrine of Warranty by the principal or his agent, forms the subject of the 4th Chapter. Perhaps the exception noticed above of mechanical defects may be referred to the head of Patent Defects.

Chap. 5, treats of fraudulent and other misrepresentations, as distinguished from warranties. Chap. 6, on the consequences of a breach of warranty. Chap. 7, on pleading, evidence, and damages. Chap. 8, on the law relating to innkeepers, farriers, trainers, and stallion masters. Chap. 9, on livery-stable keepers, agisters, and the hiring and borrowing of horses.

Part 2, treating of the wrongs occasioned by the use of horses, contains:—Chap. 1. The Criminal and Civil Liabilities incurred through negligent Driving; the Rule of the Road; negligent Driving by a Servant. Chap. 2. Hunting over the Lands of another.

Part 3 treats of the history and present state of the laws relating to racing, wagers, and gaming.

In an Appendix are given some unreported cases, the statutes, the rules of betting and racing, and some other miscellaneous information.

LONDON, JULY 24, 1847.

We have from time to time considered several of the leading decisions of our Courts relative to the rights and obligations arising out of railway transactions. We propose, during the long vacation, to complete our review of these cases, so that our readers may be the better prepared to receive new enunciations of judicial opinion upon this fruitful theme when once again

“The wrangling courts and stubborn law
To smoke and crowds and cities draw.”

We have already examined the decision in Wontner v. Skirp, (ante, pp. 209, 373; 4 Railw. Cas. 542), to the effect that a scrip-holder, who has been induced to pay his deposit and sign the parliamentary deed under a fraudulent misrepresentation by the committee, may recover such deposit in an action against a member of the managing committee. We there also referred to the class of cases supporting Walstab v. Spottiswoode, (10 Jur. 460, 498; 4 Railw. Cas. 321; and see 10 Jur. 253), establishing the doctrine, that, where the railway scheme has been wholly abandoned, the deposit may, as a general rule, be recovered, on the ground of a failure of consideration. We commented also upon the case of Wilson v. Lord Curzon, (ante, pp. 11, 47), in which it was held, that a registered promoter of a railway company cannot recover against any of the committee, simply considered as such, for services rendered by him during the period of his being so registered.

In all of these cases the committee-men have been considered in relation to members in present or in futuro of their own company; but, to complete the view of their position, it is necessary also to observe their liability to third parties, or strangers, not in any manner connected with the company. This question may be said to be now settled by the leading cases of Reynell v. Lewis (10 Jur. 1097; 4 Railw. Cas. 351) and Wyld v. Hopkins, (10 Jur. 1100; 4 Railw. Cas. 359). It will, however, probably be yet reopened, as, although the decisions in them have been recognised and adopted in every subsequent trial at Nisi Prius, where a similar state of facts has been involved, yet in several instances a bill of exceptions was tendered to the ruling of the judge, in accordance with those decisions, and writs of error upon such exceptions are now pending.

It is well known, that, at first, the tide of opinion seemed to set in strongly against provisional committeemen in their “sea of troubles,” and they were given up, without pity, as a sacrifice to ruined speculators and credulous tradesmen. The Court of Exchequer, however, like one of the Homeric deities, interposed at the critical moment on behalf of the unfortunate and the oppressed. They declared, in the two cases to which we last referred, that a provisional committeeman, as such, is not liable to every one for everything connected with the scheme “committed” or entrusted to their superintendence; that he is simply to be regarded as any other person, not as a partner, nor a quasi partner, but liable only for his own acts or for such acts as are proved to have been authorised by him. They held it was not sufficient merely to shew that a consent had been given to act on the committee, or to be published to the world as having so consented, but that he must be shewn to have made the contract, sued upon, personally or by an agent duly constituted for that purpose; that it was a question of fact for the jury, who, with due assistance from the judge, were to apply the legal principles affecting the relation of principal and agent. They also decided that where the defendant has authorised his name to be inserted in a particular prospectus, and that has been so publicly circulated with his consent, that a jury would presume that the plaintiff knew of it, or if the plaintiff has had it shewn to him at or before the time of making the contract, and has in either case acted upon it in making the contract, the question of the defendant's liability will depend on the contents of the prospectus, and the inference which a reasonable man ought to draw from them.

It is said, in a recent work, wherein this subject is treated in a clear and able manner*, "The proper question for a jury will substantially be, first, whether the defendant authorised the insertion of his name in the list of the provisional committee; and secondly, whether he authorised the managing committee, or their agents to pledge his credit for the debts of the concern. If the first of these questions be answered in the affirmative, but no evidence be given to shew a delegation of authority by the defendant, ultra the fact of his consent, the second of the above questions will, it is conceived, become one of law merely, and the verdict will have to be entered for the defendant; unless, indeed, where the plaintiff relies upon the terms of the prospectus as shewing a delegation of authority by the provisional committee as a body;" the construction of which document will be for the judge.

Since these decisions the judges have, in many instances, nonsuited the plaintiff, where the only proof affecting the defendant has been his consent to become and to be published as a member of the provisional committee.

The same rule, we conceive, will prevail where the action is against a member of the managing, as of the provisional, committee.

The decision in Reynell v. Lewis and Wyld v. Hopkins proceeds upon a clear and intelligible principle, and possesses the advantage of applying, to a comparatively new state of things, the well-known and established rules of law regulating the relation of principal and agent. It is a decision of extensive application, not only as affecting committees of railway companies, but also those of charitable institutions, clubs, or any other of the Protean forms, by whatever name distinguished, in which association appears at the present day.

In the language of the Court of Exchequer, "the schemes may be various—to establish an hospital or place of emigration, to which persons are to subscribe merely from charitable motives, or partly from these motives, partly from others; or a proprietary school, or literary institution, or assembly-room, in which they are to be beneficially interested as shareholders—or to obtain an act for a bridge, drainage, railroad, or canal; but whatever the object may be, it seems to us to make little or no difference in the position of the person agreeing to act as a committee-man."

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Fitzherbert Macdonald, Gent., of the city of Salisbury, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the city of Salisbury and county of Wilts.

The Law of Qualification and Registration of Parliamentary Electors, &c. By DAVID POWER, Esq., Barrister. [Sweet, 1847.]

Mr. Power has in this little work done that which requires much prudence and self-denial. He has kept in view that readers of law books seek for information useful to themselves in practice, rather than for manifestations of the genius of the writer, and that, therefore, they would much rather have a careful collection of decisions, judiciously selected and arranged, so as to afford ready information, than brilliant and learned dissertations, tending principally to shew how very acute a man the writer is. We incline to think that such a course is more prudent in a legal writer, as well as less egotistical, than that of the writer who sacrifices space and the time of his readers to exhibit his own ability. For, after all, the benefit that a young lawyer derives from writing consists, not so much in convincing a passing reader that he is a very clever man, as in connecting his name habitually with the idea of practical usefulness, making, as it were, his name familiar to the ears of the Profession, as that of a man whose book is referred to for practice. The step between continually using a man's book, and consulting himself is not very great, and hence it will be found that the men who have risen into practice through their works, have been generally those who have pruned them as much as possible of all but that which is certain and strictly useful, and have sacrificed the desire of personally shining to that of being guides to their readers in practice.

The plan of Mr. Power's little work is simply to collect into a methodical form the essence of the decisions of the Court of Common Pleas since the 6 Vict. c. 18, upon the questions that have been brought before it from the revision courts; and this plan he has very well and carefully executed. The first part contains the cases bearing upon the qualification of electors; the second the cases upon registration, and all its accessories and consequences, including those having reference to the powers and duties of revising barristers; the right of appealing, and the mode of framing appeals, and the jurisdiction of parliamentary committees. The chapter on appeals will be found peculiarly useful to the revising barrister.

Some of the cases cited by Mr. Power afford curious illustration of the struggles that will be made by men to elude by cunning juggling the plain intention of the Legislature; for instance, with reference to what is "residence,"—a subject that for more purposes than one has often puzzled the Courts, the case of Wickborn, App., and Thomas, Resp., is almost ludicrous in its circumstances. Mr. Power thus abridges the case (see p. 40) from the report in 1 B. & Ar. 259, and 8 Scott, N. S., 781:—

"The claimant," he says, "was a wine merchant residing and carrying on his business at Gloucester, which is more than seven miles from the borough of Tewkesbury, where he had for many years occupied a house, (in which he carried on his business), and also bonding vaults for the bulk of the stock. He was a married man, and kept one domestic servant at his establishment at Gloucester. With the object of qualifying himself to vote for the borough of Tewkesbury, the claimant had, since the year 1841, paid to Mr. Sproule, a friend of his, and also agent for one of the sitting members for the borough, the sum of 9*l.* a week for the use of a furnished bed-room in Mr. Sproule's house, situate within the said borough, and as a closet, about six feet by three, without a window, of which closet the complainant kept the key, and between January and July, 1844, (the year of registration), he had kept some wine samples in it. During

'the same period he had slept in the bed-room twelve times, and during the year, ending July, 1844, between fifteen and twenty times, on the occasion of his coming to Tewkesbury on business; but had never taken his meals at Mr. Sproule's, except on some occasions, when invited to dine as a friend. Mr. Sproule never let lodgings to any other person, and made the above arrangement with the claimant, for the purpose of assisting him to qualify as a voter for the borough.

'The revising barrister decided, that the claimant had not resided within the borough of Tewkesbury, within the meaning of the stat. 2 Will. 4, c. 45, so as to entitle him to be placed upon the list of voters for the borough; and it was held by the Court of Common Pleas, that he was right in the conclusion he came to.

"The Court," he continues, "seem to have based their decision on that case, upon the ground that it did not appear that there was any bonâ fide animus revertendi on the part of the claimant with respect to the bed-room at Tewkesbury; and this, upon all the facts of the case, although chiefly because the claimant had a residence and domicile at Gloucester in which his wife and family lived, and because the bed-room was taken for the purpose of obtaining a vote, although neither of these circumstances would, of itself, avoid a residence valid in other respects."

Certainly, if the Legislature had any meaning in the 27th section of the Reform Act, it was, that a person should have that sort of substantial residence in or within the prescribed distance of the place for which he claims to vote, from which may be inferred some of that personal connexion in interest with it, which may be supposed to unite a man to the place where he has his home; and though it may be very difficult to define what is, and what is not, technically residence, it is impossible not to feel, that, in the case cited, the Court has seized and effectuated the substantial intention of the act.

In pages 13, 14, and 15 will be found the important cases that have been decided upon the question of conveyances made to multiply voices,—cases which have decided (as we had anticipated in THE JURIST, vol. 9, p. 281) that bonâ fide purchases of lands taken in such form as to multiply voices, and taken for the express purpose of acquiring votes, are lawful. (Riley, App., and Crosley, Resp., 1 B. & Ar. 682; 2 C. B. 146; Power, 15).

The nature of Mr. Power's work and our limits, preclude any more lengthened extracts from it, as its merit consists, as we have said, not in any original dissertations of the author, but in a judicious arrangement of the cases, and an able concentration into small compass of their material contents. We think that Mr. Power's little book will be found useful to those who may be concerned in any way in the business of the Registration Court, and with this we conclude our notice of it.

LONDON, JULY 31, 1847.

WHATEVER may have been the result of the session just expired, with regard to its political legislation, a subject with which we have nothing to do; its career as to legal legislation has been marked principally by two measures,—the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and the Trustee Act,—as to the first of which we more than once expressed our opinion while it was before the House, and on both of which we shall now proceed to make a few comments.

And, first, as to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, which, whether useful or useless, is the law under which we must now proceed in matters of bankruptcy jurisdiction. It appears that the whole jurisdiction of the Court of Review is transferred, bodily as it were, to the Vice-Chancellor who shall be appointed for that purpose; the offices of the chief judges and of the other judges of the Court of Review being abolished. But though the court and the offices of its judges are abolished, the persons who now hold office and act in the Court of Review, other, it must be presumed, than the judges, will continue to hold the same and to do the duties thereof in the same way as heretofore; that is, we conclude, it is meant to be said, that the judicial staff of registrars and other officers who now do duty in the Court of Review, will continue their functions in bankruptcy under the direction of the Vice-Chancellor to whom the business in bankruptcy shall be transferred.

We conclude that there will be little, if any, difference in the mode of proceeding in the business hitherto transacted by the Court of Review, beyond a change in the style of the petitions, and such changes of form as are consequent upon that change. A petition will, under the act, we apprehend, be presented, not to the Lord Chancellor, but to the appointed Vice-Chancellor, as the transfer of jurisdiction is in terms to such Vice-

Chancellor as shall be appointed; and it will, we conceive, be properly intitled "in bankruptcy" simply, instead of "in the Court of Review." At present, it will be recollected, that affidavits in bankruptcy are still made in the third person, whereas affidavits in chancery are, under the 126th Order of May, 1845, to be taken in the first person. We apprehend, that, notwithstanding the transfer of the jurisdiction to the Court of Chancery, affidavits in bankruptcy will still continue to be taken in the third person, under the 3rd section of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102, by which it is enacted, "That all laws, orders, and authorities touching the practice and manner of proceeding in the said Court of Review, and appealing to and from the said Court, shall continue in force and be applicable to the jurisdiction of the said Vice-Chancellor so appointed."

In truth, so far as regards the bankruptcy business hitherto transacted in the Court of Review, which is the only part of the act we shall at present comment upon, it would seem that the act intends to make no alteration whatever in the nature of the business to be transacted, or in the mode of transacting it, except as we have already observed, in so far as the style of the Court will be altered.

The effect of the Trustees Act will be much wider, and, as we conceive, will be productive of extensive benefit and convenience to a very large class of persons. Hitherto, as it is well known, no trust monies could be administered under the direction of the Court of Chancery, without the entire process of a Chancery suit; we except, of course, the single instance of legacies payable into court under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, which, however, can hardly be called, in practice, an administration of trust monies. But in reference to those vast masses of property which are settled or bequeathed in trust, upon trusts which, however originally simple, so continually become, by the change of circumstances, onerous to the trustees, or unfit to be left in the hands of the trustees, there is no access to the protection and guidance of the Court of Chancery, except through the tedious and expensive machinery of bill and answer, probably evidence, one or more references to the Master, &c.

The new act is, in its most material provisions, extremely short. It is enacted, first, "That all trustees, executors, administrators, or other persons, having in their hands any monies belonging to any trust whatsoever, or the major part of them, shall be at liberty, on filing an affidavit shortly describing the instrument creating the trust, according to the best of their knowledge and belief, to pay the same, with the privity of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, into the Bank of England, to the account of such Accountant-General in the matter of the particular trust (describing the same by the names of the parties, as accurately as may be, for the purpose of distinguishing it), in trust to attend the orders of the said court; and that all trustees or other persons having any annuities or stock standing in their name in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or of the East India Company, or South Sea Company, or any government or parliamentary securities standing in their names, or in the names of any deceased persons of whom they shall be personal representatives, upon any trusts whatsoever, or the major part of them, shall be at liberty to transfer or deposit such stocks or securities into or in the name of the said Accountant-General, with his privity, in the matter of the particular trust, (describing the same as aforesaid), in trust to attend the orders of the said court; and in every such case the receipt of one of the cashiers of the said bank for the money so paid, or, in the case of stocks or securities, the certificate of the proper officer, of the transfer or deposit of such stocks or securities, shall be a sufficient discharge to such trustees or other persons for the money so paid, or the stocks or securities so transferred or deposited."

Secondly, "that such orders as shall seem fit shall be from time to time made by the High Court of Chancery in respect of the trust monies, stocks, or securities so paid in, transferred, and deposited as aforesaid, and for the investment and payment of any such monies, or of any dividends or interest on any such stocks or securities, and for the transfer and delivery out of any such stocks and securities, and for the administration of any such trusts generally, upon a petition to be presented in a summary way to the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls, without bill, by such party or parties as to the Court shall appear to be competent and necessary in that behalf, and service of such petition shall be made upon such person or persons as the Court shall see fit and direct; and every order made upon any such petition shall have the same authority and effect, and shall be enforced and subject to rehearing and appeal, in the same manner as if the same had been made in a suit regularly instituted in the court; and if it shall appear that any such trust funds cannot be safely distributed without the institution of one or more suit or suits, the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls may direct any such suit or suits to be instituted."

The effect of these clauses would seem to be, that wherever there are trust funds, (consisting of money, funds, or stock of the kind described), and wherever the parties desire the protection of the Court, the trustees may secure such funds in court by a simple payment or transfer; and that any questions relating to the administration of the trusts may be disposed of on petition, unless the Court shall require a suit. Of course the act does not apply to any case where the cestui que trust claims in invitum against the trustees, as for a breach of trust. But multitudes of cases which can now only be disposed of by suit, will be dealt with upon petition. At present, the general rule is, if there is any question upon the construction of the instrument of trust, there must be a bill. Henceforth, we apprehend, the course will be to go as far as possible in deciding questions on petition, and that it will only be in extreme cases that a suit will be directed. The cases of Stiffe v. Everitt (1 My. & C. 37) and Story v. Tonge, (7 Beav. 91) may, perhaps, be referred to, by way of illustration. In those cases the Court refused to decide on petition; such cases might, we conceive, under the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, be decided on petition.

PATENT—NOVELTY OF INVENTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

50, Chancery-lane, July 26th, 1847.

Sir,—In your notice of my work on the Specification of a Patent, you state it to be perfectly immaterial as to the legal effect of user upon a subsequent patent, that the method of practising the invention should be publicly known, provided the invention be used, and its produce sold. You speak of this as "perfectly settled law," and quote Wood v. Zimmer and Tennant's case in support of this view. Now, all I propose to say at present is, that this broad assertion is not borne out by these cases.

In Wood v. Zimmer the patentee had himself previously sold the produce of the invention, and on this ground his subsequent patent was declared void. Baron Parke, alluding to this case in Morgan v. Smead, said, "If the inventor could sell his invention, keeping the secret to himself, and, when it was likely to be discovered by another, take out a patent, he might have, practically, a monopoly for a much longer period than fourteen years." "The law so laid down" (said the same judge) "appears to be founded in reason." But this does not go the length of affirming your proposition, that a public sale, under any circumstances, "is sufficient to invalidate a subsequent patent." It does not reach the point, that, in any conceivable case, the question as to the mode of practising the invention is "perfectly immaterial."

Then, again, as regards Tennant's case, the material fact is, that Tennant derived from another the invention alleged to be his own, which fact alone was destructive of his patent right. And there is ample room for questioning whether the evidence adduced, irrespective of that fact, would have negatived his claim on the ground of previous public user, since it only proved that one firm (consisting of three persons) and their two servants knew how to use the invention, and they kept it a secret, the rest of the trade not being able, for aught that appeared in evidence, to discover the process. It may be doubted whether this could be called public knowledge "sufficient to invalidate a subsequent patent."

In Webster's Reports of Patent Cases, (p. 245), the point is thus adverted to in a note. After mentioning the propriety of the nonsuit, on the ground of the invention having been acquired from another, the author says, "On the other ground of nonsuit, the secret user before the patent, considerable difficulty exists. The authority of Tennant's case, in respect of this objection, must not be too implicitly relied on."

Instead of offering any observations of my own, I will now simply refer you, without comment, to a long note at pp. 718—720 of the same work, in which, at p. 720, the author says, "It would appear, on principle and on reason, that the knowledge of an invention which is to vitiate letters patent must be such knowledge, or such means of knowledge, as will teach others to practise the invention."

And, again, I will refer you to the remark of Lord Chief Justice Gibbs, in Wood v. Zimmer, on the question of novelty, quoted by Hindmarsh, (p. 113). "Some things are obvious as soon as they are made public. Of others the scientific world may possess itself by analysis. Some inventions almost baffle discovery. But, to entitle a man to a patent, the invention must be new to the world," (that is, to the persons addressed in the specification).

It may be suggested, from this language, that the term "inventor" in a practical sense, is not necessarily to be withheld from the man who merely removes the existing impediment to public knowledge of the art of practising an invention, by making public that which before was secret; since he may, in this manner, be said to furnish an adequate legal consideration for the grant of letters-patent.

I trust, Sir, it will thus appear that the two cases referred to, are not to be taken as conclusive of the point in support of which they have been cited.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
WILLIAM SPENCE.

If the important question at issue between us and Mr. Spence were settled in accordance with that gentleman's argument, the policy of the Statute of Monopolies would be evaded, and judges and juries would have a most difficult task imposed upon them. Mr. Spence's position is, that no public sale or use of an invention prior to the sealing of the letters-patent will invalidate the grant, unless the public use is such as might enable competent witnesses to understand the true practical nature of the invention. "Competent witnesses" are persons conversant with the branch of manufacture most nearly allied to the given invention, and their competency consists in practical knowledge,—not in sagacity or acuteness. The most "competent" witness might say, without derogation, "Davius sum, non Œdipus." But a Davus could not discover the secret of a thimble-rig. The witness being selected solely for his knowledge, his power of penetration may be a maximum or a minimum:—by what standard is the jury to be guided? We knew an accomplished analyst who was puzzled by many of the conundrums in the shape of "questions in simple equations" which schoolboys ordinarily resolve with ease. The Rosetta Stone "published" the secret of the hieroglyphics to Champollion and Young,—were they merely competent witnesses? Mr. Spence's doctrine would impose upon juries the task of resolving a question as indeterminate as the length of the Chancellor's foot. We think it is not sanctioned by the authorities.

In Wood v. Zimmer, (Holt, 58), the patentees had in their specification withheld some useful information, and they had sold the product before the grant of the patent, but not so as to enable any one to guess at the nature of the process. The patent was held void on both grounds. Gibbs, C. J., said, "With respect to the second objection, the question is somewhat new. Some things are obvious as soon as they are made public; of others, the scientific world may possess itself by analysis. Some inventions almost baffle discovery. But to entitle a man to a patent, the invention must be new to the world. The public sale of that which is afterwards made the subject of a patent, though sold by the inventor only, makes the patent void." Here, so far from relying on the peculiarity of the prior sale having been by the inventor himself, the judge expressly decided the point in spite of that circumstance. His words imply that had the sale been by a stranger, the case would have been stronger against the patent. The proposition on which we insist, is here stated in all its generality. The observations cited from Morgan v. Seaward were intended to explain why prior use by the patentee himself should not form an exception to the rule. In Tennant's case, the prior secret user had been by third parties, and was expressly made a ground of nonsuit by Lord Ellenborough, with whose authority that of Mr. Webster certainly is not to be put into competition. The decisions in Wood v. Zimmer and Tennant's case have never been judicially questioned. B.

SOLICITORS' ACCOUNTS.—An EXEMPLAR, price
 2s. 6d., illustrative of Mr. RICKARDS' SYSTEM, the only one calculated to meet the necessities of the Profession, and demonstrate its own accuracy throughout, will be forwarded free by the Author, from
 No. 4, Richmond-terrace, Walworth, London, to any part of the country, on the receipt of 3d postage stamps.

Simple, comprehensive, efficient, and complete, the plan economises the time, labour, and expense of its patrons; detects inaccuracies and omissions; and so arranges the monetary transactions designed for its columns, as to ascertain in a few minutes, and by the original entries,— the value of the estate circulating in the business,—the amount due on the client's, or deposit account,—the extent of business realizations,— the sum available for private purposes,—the balance of the cash-box and bankers' account,—and the cost of the official establishment. And it so arranges the transcription of the disbursement and professional items, as at once to ascertain the cost of every business, and the net profits of all the businesses completed in the year.

The Author has had access to more than 2000 offices wherein other modes had obtained; has had the greatest possible facilities for perfecting his own plans; and has had the satisfaction of seeing their best, and only one among them deserving the name of "System"—the Double Entry give place to his own, notwithstanding the opposing influence of educational prejudices and long-confirmed habits; and he trusts to see it welcomed in many other offices where the time of the principals, the correctness of entries, and the incidental ascertainment of their results are duly appreciated, and a set of account books is required. He publishes it with the best and most ample guarantee not only for its intrinsic superiority, but for its practical importance in every of these cases; induct-ing, as it must, the uninitiated into the principles of book-keeping, the careless into habits of regularity, and the assiduous into the wisest use of their energies, and the largest recompense for their toil. From many among the 800 Subscribers to his Plan, in addition to their respective thanks and good wishes, he has received from 10 to 100 guineas to resolve their accounts into its forms, and induce their clerks into a practical acquaintance with its principles; and to these he can refer with the greatest confidence.

THE COUNTY COURTS.

A QUESTION has been raised, but not decided, in the superior courts, with respect to the construction of the County Courts Act, which goes to the very root of the existence of those courts, viz. whether the act does not imperatively require a separate judge to be appointed to each district, and whether, therefore, the judges, appointed as they have been to a circuit of several districts, have, in fact, jurisdiction.

In an able article on the county courts in a cotemporary journal*, the writer contends, with considerable force, that the objection is valid. If it is, of course all the judgments that have been pronounced by the pretended county courts judges have been so much useless breath, and a healing act will be required next year to establish their validity. But we confess, that, with every disposition to legal refinement, we conceive the objection in question to be rather unsubstantial. The language of the act is, that "there shall be a judge for each district to be created under this act." And the Queen has power to create districts, a power which she has exercised, under the act.

The whole question, as one of construction, turns on the use of the words, "a judge for each district." Do these words mean that each district shall have a separate judge, or do they not merely mean that no district shall be without a judge? Do they mean, that to every district there shall be a distinct judicial man, or only that each shall have a judge, but that one man may be several judges? If the Legislature had meant the former, it may be thought that the words, a separate judge for each district, or equivalent words, would have been used. The words actually used are surely satisfied by appointing a judge to make a circuit through a group of districts; because, if there be no district without a judge belonging to it, there will be a judge for each district, though not exclusively for each district.

Taking this view of the construction of the act, all the expressions referring to a district in the singular, which occur in the act, and on which our respected cotemporary relies, to support the objection to the jurisdiction of the county courts, are reconciled with the 3rd clause; when, for instance, it is declared that "the county court may be holden simultaneously in all or any of such districts," that needs not necessarily be understood to mean that there must be a separate judge to every district. There must be a county court to each district undoubtedly, and there may be a separate judge to each such court; and if there are several judges, then the several courts may be held simultaneously: but it is not to be inferred, because the act provides for the acting of several judges simultaneously, if there shall be several, that, therefore, it imperatively requires that there shall be several.

Again, the provision that no judge shall practise as a barrister within the district for which his court is holden, is quite consistent with his having several districts under his charge, if we look at the judge not as Mr. A. or Mr. B., but as the judge of a particular county court for the time being. In this view, one man may be several judges,—a state of things of which we have numerous instances in our jurisdiction, and of which a notable instance was, we might say still is, the union in one person of the offices of a judge of the Court of Chancery and a judge of the Court of Bankruptcy. No one ever thought that there was not de facto a chief judge of the Court of Review, because the same person who held that important office, was, at another time, a judge of the Court of Chancery; and yet this is the sort of argument which must be used to shew that the present judges of the county courts are not well appointed, if it is to be held, that, because there is not a separate man for the bench of each county court district, there is not a judge for each district.

So much for the technical argument. Let us now look at the substantial objects of the act, and the argument of convenience. The division of the country into districts of moderate extent, for the purpose of county court jurisdiction, is manifestly convenient, in order that each space of country of moderate extent may possess the offices of the court, to which suitors may resort at all times for the transaction of the business preliminary to trial. But it would be of little use to have a judge perpetually accessible, for whose judicial exertions there might not be occupation during a quarter of his time. It may, therefore, and in the common course of things must, be the case, that a separate county court in each district, with its official machinery, will be essential to the beneficial working of the act; but that, on the contrary, a district small enough to meet the wants of the suitors, with reference to the office business of the court, would be a great deal too small to give employment to any one individual as judge. The reading, therefore, that we give to the 3rd section is that which is consistent with the general scope and objects of the act.

We cannot, on this occasion, leave the subject of the county courts, nor shall we probably on any occasion leave it, without urging on the consideration of the Profession the necessity of there being some appeal from those courts. The conflict of decision is already frightful, and must increase, unless there be some superior authority to restrain and regulate the exercise of individual judgment. The mode of appeal to the Common Pleas adopted for the Courts of the Revising Barristers has been found to work excellently; and there seems no reason why it should not apply equally well to the county courts; there can, at any rate, be no great difficulty in devising a method of appealing from the county courts; and without an appeal in some form, it is manifest that these courts will soon incur the loss of all uniformity of law and practice, and with it, the loss of public respect.

ATTENDANT TERMS. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Lord Brougham's act for the abolition of attendant terms, left many of those grotesque retainers of the law in a state of syncope, liable to actual or suppositious resuscitation, (the pleaders have not agreed which), for the succour, in his extremity, of the master whose livery they last wore. But the Court of Queen's Bench has recently laid hold of the Statute of Limitations in order to give the coup de grace to some of these sermes au bois dormans. In the case of Doe v. Jacobs v. Phillips, decided in last Hilary Term, (16 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 269), an action of ejectment was brought upon a satisfied term of years, of which the last assignment had been made in 1767 to a person under whom the lessor of the plaintiff claimed by virtue of limited letters of administration obtained for the purpose of the action. It is not stated in the report, but must be assumed, that the parties in whose favour the term was assigned, had been in possession from the date of the assignment to within twenty years next before the commencement of the action, and that the defendants were not entitled to the protection of the term. The Court held, that the lessor's title was barred by the Statute of Limitations, (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74). Lord Denman, C. J., said, "Under sect. 3 the right would seem to have first accrued in the present instance, when the person through whom the lessor of the plaintiff claims became entitled to possession by virtue of the assignment. If, on the other hand, you make the defendants tenants at will to the lessor of the plaintiff, there has been no demand of possession, and so no right is shewn to recover." Coleridge, J., said, "As soon as it is conceded that the termor has a right to recover without any proceeding preliminary to bringing the action, we must look to see what effect sects. 2 and 3 have upon that right, and I clearly think that the effect is to bar it."

Even if the doctrine of this case were applicable only to satisfied terms of years, it would be very important, because the title to many estates now depends solely on the protection derivable (or which, but for Doe v. Phillips, would be derivable) from attendant terms. But the principle of the decision extends to all outstanding legal estates whatever, whether in fee or for years, satisfied or unsatisfied. We think that the decision is most unquestionably erroneous, and, if it is to be sustained, pregnant with the most mischievous consequences. Before we examine the grounds of the doctrine of the Court of Queen's Bench, we will put two cases for the purpose of illustrating its operation.

In December, 1836, an estate was mortgaged in fee to A., who has never been in possession, or received any acknowledgment of his title, and has since been paid off, but has not reconveyed the estate. The mortgage remains in possession until 1843, when he dies, leaving B., his heir, an infant. C. obtains possession, and settling up a plausible title, sells in 1845 to D., who pays his money without notice, and obtains possession. According to Doe v. Phillips, the infant, getting in the legal estate, would have had a remedy until December, 1846, but not afterwards, although the whole period of actual dispossession had been only two or three years.

Again, suppose that A., the owner of the fee, makes in 1834 a mortgage by demise, sells to B. in 1835 without giving him notice of the mortgage, and in the same year sells again to C. without notice of B.'s title. B. gets the legal fee and possession; C. pays off the mortgage and obtains an assignment of the term to a trustee. The fraud being discovered, the trustee in 1836 brings ejectment against B., who is turned out, and the land is delivered to C., who remains in possession until 1847, without taking the precaution of sending a written acknowledgment of title to his trustee. In 1847 B. brings ejectment, and, on the authority of Doe v. Phillips, turns out C., after twenty years undisturbed possession! For, according to the Court of Queen's Bench, C. was in possession adversely to his trustee, and such possession at the end of twenty years not only barred the trustee's remedy, but extinguished his estate, (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34). Until the expiration of the twenty years, B., the revivander in fee, could not recover, by reason of the term; his right first accrued in 1846, when the term became extinguished by adverse possession. Thus, the effect of the doctrine in Doe v. Phillips is to make the possession of another trust a bar to his trustee for the benefit of an adverse claimant. If this is law, courts of equity must extend their jurisdiction. But we think it is clearly not law.

By the general enactment in sect. 2 of the stat. 3 & 4

Will. 4, c. 27, no action shall be brought to recover land after twenty years from the time when the right to bring such action first accrued. Sect. 3, by way of explanation, gives instances of the first accrual of a right of action under various circumstances. Of these there is only one material to the present discussion:—

“When the person claiming such land or rent, or some person through whom he claims, shall, in respect of the estate or interest claimed, have been in possession or in receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent, and shall, while entitled thereto, have been dispossessed, or have discontinued such possession or receipt, then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time of such dispossession or discontinuance of possession, or at the last time at which any such profits or rent were or was so received.”

The possession of cestui que trust is the possession of his trustee, for cestui que trust, being in possession consistently with the trust, is tenant at the will of the trustee, (4 Barr. Abr. 198; Hard. 400), and cannot be turned out without a previous demand of possession. (Right v. Beard, 13 East, 210; Doc v. Jackson, 1 B. & C. 448; Res v. Street, 4 Nev. & M. 42). The will or assent of the trustee is implied in the first instance from the nature of the relation between the parties, and on the death either of trustee or of cestui que trust, or on a change by any other means of the ownership of either the legal or the equitable estate, the same implication would be made. It follows, that, until the trustee has expressly put an end to the tenancy, his right of action does not accrue.

The 7th section of the Statute of Limitations provides, that, for the purposes of the act, every tenancy at will shall be deemed to have determined, at the latest, within a year after its commencement, except in the case of a mortgagor or cestui que trust.

In Doc v. Phillips the trustee had done no act to put an end to the tenancy of his cestui que trust; and if the action was brought against the cestui que trust, that, and that only, was the proper answer to it; but if, as we assume, the action was brought against a person in possession not entitled to the benefit of the term, the plaintiff ought to have succeeded, unless the defendant could shew that no cestui que trust had been in possession so as to preserve the trustee's title within the last twenty years, and this was not shewn.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Although, as we have already seen, the Court will award a mandamus to compel the making of rates for the relief of the poor, they will not grant it “to make an equal rate,” without the parties first appealing against it, it being within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to judge whether a rate is equal, or whether proper persons are put into it. If it be unequal, or if persons who ought to be inserted are omitted, it is a matter of appeal, and within the jurisdiction of the sessions. (Res v. The Guardians of the Poor of Canterbury, 4 Burr. 2290; Res v. Barnstable, 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 88; 1 Barnard, 137; S. C., Res v. Freshford, Andr. 24; 1 Nol., P. L., 62). And where an application for a mandamus to the churchwardens and overseers was made to insert the names of particular persons in a poor-rate, upon an affidavit that their right of voting for members of parliament depended upon it, and that they were omitted in the poor-rate, it was insisted that the case was provided for by 17 Geo. 2, c. 33, whereby an appeal lay to the sessions for persons left out of the rates, and that it was not proper for the Court to interpose by mandamus. See, C. J., said,

“As to the authority of granting a mandamus, there is no difference made by 17 Geo. 2, c. 33. It has been determined that this Court can grant a mandamus to make a rate if none be already made; but not to make an equal rate, if it be unequal on the face of it. (Res v. Barnstable, Res v. Freshford, Res v. The Guardians of the Poor of Canterbury, ubi sup.). We can do no more than order the overseers to execute the authority given them by the act. We never issue a mandamus to grant administrations to particular persons, or to give a particular judgment where it is discretionary in the inferior jurisdiction what judgment to give, or to whom they will grant administration. If the sessions refuse to receive the appeal, we can grant a mandamus to compel them to do it.” The Court, therefore, refused the writ. (Res v. The Officers of Wexley, 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 124; S. C., 2 Str. 1259). Nor will a mandamus be granted to collect a rate; (Res v. Norwich Overseers, 1 Nol., P. L., 28; Harr. Index, “Mandamus to Parish Officers,” 3818): nor will the Court grant a mandamus to make a rate to reimburse churchwardens such sums as they had expended, or might thereafter expend, on the parish church; (Res v. Havorth, 12 East, 556); nor will the Court grant a mandamus to make a church-rate, the subject-matter being purely of an ecclesiastical jurisdiction. (Res v. St. Peter's, Thetford, 5 T. R. 364). And where an application was made for a mandamus to restore a vestry-clerk, the Court refused the application; Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, “No instance but one has been mentioned in which a similar application was made to this Court; and we have no satisfactory account of that case. This is not a fixed permanent office for which a mandamus will lie. It depends altogether on the will of the inhabitants, who may elect a different clerk at each vestry. Neither is any salary annexed to this situation; if the fees are to be paid out of the poor-rates, there is an end to all prescriptive right to it. With regard to the supposed agreement made by the parishioners that this should be an annual office, it could not be obligatory longer than the parties chose to fulfil it; for it might be revoked at the next vestry. This is an office merely of a private nature; and if a mandamus were to be granted to restore to the office of vestry-clerk, I should soon expect to hear of an application for a mandamus to restore to the office of a toll-gate-keeper of a turnpike-road. As to any other mandamus, if the party be inclined, after the fate of this rule, to apply for a mandamus to be directed to those who have the custody of the parish books, to compel them to deliver such books to him, he must make a separate application for that purpose; but the present rule must be discharged.” (Res v. The Churchwardens of Croydon, 5 T. R. 713; and see 4 M. & S. 324). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to a board of guardians, to admit a person as their clerk, who complained that the person filling the office had been unduly elected by the votes of guardians, who were themselves not properly elected. (Reg. v. The Dolegelly Union, 3 N. & P. 542; S. C., 8 Adol. & Ell. 561). Where a person was appointed sexton of a parish by the minister, in whom the right to appoint prima facie was, and the churchwardens had refused to call a vestry-meeting of the parishioners (who also claimed the appointment) to elect one; and it appeared that there was another method of trying the right; the Court refused to grant a mandamus to the minister and churchwardens to call the vestry-meeting. (Res v. The Minister and Churchwardens of Stoke Damerel, 5 Adol. & Ell. 584). Nor will a mandamus be granted to the churchwardens to deliver a vestry-book to the vestry-clerk; (Anon., 2 Chit. 255): nor will a mandamus lie to compel the vicar, churchwardens, and parishioners of a parish to meet for the purpose of electing an organist to the parish church, although within the time of living memory there has always been an organist, who has been paid a stipend out of the church-rates. Pattenon, J., said, on looking at the authorities, "I cannot find any which go the length of saying that I can issue such a writ for the election of an organist. The utmost that Lord Stowell decided in the case of The Churchwardens of St. John's, Margate, v. The Parishioners, Vicar, and Inhabitants of the Same (1 Hagg. C. R. 198) was, that he would grant a faculty for erecting an organ, because the majority of the parishioners might direct a rate for keeping it up and paying the organist. That is the utmost extent to which that case goes, and I cannot find that the other authorities carry it any further. I, therefore, think it impossible that a mandamus should go to the inhabitants generally to elect an organist." (Ex parte Le Crew, 2 D. & L. 571). Nor does a mandamus lie to restore the clerk and treasurer of the guardians of the poor. (Re v. The Guardians of St. Nicholas, Rochester, 4 M. & S. 324). Nor will a mandamus be granted to inspect parish books at the instance of a parishioner, for the purpose of gaining information which might prove useful to him, with a view to support his claim to an estate in the parish. (Re v. Smallpiece, 2 Chit. 288. See Re v. Cleve, 4 B. & C. 899; S. C., 7 D. & R. 393). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to overseers, commanding them to allow inspection of the warrant of their appointment, upon the application of a rated inhabitant, suggesting defects in it. (Reg. v. Harrison, 2 New Sess. Cas. 490; S. C., 10 Jur. 981).

Although, as we have already seen, the Court will grant a mandamus to justices to make a warrant of distress for a poor-rate, they, nevertheless, will not grant the application without the parties have been previously summoned; therefore, on application to the Court for a mandamus for this purpose, Lord Kenyon said, "The payment of a poor-rate, unless it be set aside, must be enforced; and if the magistrates will not issue a summons to the person who refuses to pay the rate, this Court will grant a mandamus to compel them to do it; but a summons must precede a warrant of distress, which is in the nature of an execution. On the summons the party may shew a sufficient reason to the magistrate why a warrant of distress should not issue. It is an invariable maxim in our law, that no man shall be punished before he has had an opportunity of being heard, whereas if a warrant of distress were to be issued without any previous summons, the party would have no opportunity of shewing cause why execution should not issue against him. (Re v. Bruce, 6 T. R. 198; S. C., Bott, P. L., pl. 269; overruling Re v. The Justices of Middlesex, 1 Wils. 133. See also Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 270; S. C., 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 271).

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price-10. 10s. in strong cloth binding, BURN'S PRINCIPLES OF THE PLEDGE AND TARIFF OFFICERS. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Viet., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Pledge" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; abstract of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Pledge," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1817 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of these Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone so many changes not to render a New Edition (embracing every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Magistrates engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great attention has been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Pledge," which comprises the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE and his object has been to furnish the laws at full length, to be qualified that an unexceptionable abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and containing the Statute themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Note.

LAW.—A Gentleman who during the present season has filled the situation of Conveyancing Clerk in an office of the first respectability in town, and who had previously been fifteen years in two offices in the country, will shortly be in want of another Situation. References unexceptionable. Address C. M. W., Messrs. Witherby's, Law Stationers, 54, Parliament-street, Westminster.

LONDON, AUGUST 14, 1847.

THE question under what circumstances the Court of Chancery will interfere to restrain parties from dealing with the personal estate of a testator or intestate, pending proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court, respecting the grant of probate or of letters of administration, has received a very recent decision * by the Lord Chancellor. The material facts in the case were very few; and the real and, in fact, only question before the Court was, whether probate having been granted of the will of the testator Ricketts, and there being a suit instituted in the Ecclesiastical Court for recall of probate, and a decree in that suit requiring the executor to bring in the probate, and to prove the will in solemn form, the Court of Chancery would, in the meantime, grant an injunction against the persons who, if there had been no such suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, were admitted to be the persons having the legal title to receive the testator's assets. The bill contained no direct allegation of fraud or misconduct against the defendant: but it did contain an allegation, that in the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court it was sworn by the plaintiffs that the probate had been obtained by means of fraudulent representations. It was contended by the plaintiff's counsel, that the decree of the Ecclesiastical Court for bringing in probate, submitted to by the defendant, operated as, at least, so far a curtailment of the legal right of the executors to receive and hold the testator's assets, that they were not, for all purposes, competent to deal with and protect the estate, and, therefore, that the Court had, and would exercise jurisdiction to protect it, by restraining them from acting, and by appointing a receiver, pending the decision, to whom the legal representation of the deceased should be ultimately given. His Lordship, however, held, that, consistently with the doctrine of Watkins v. Brent, (1 My. & C. 97), to which he adhered, the mere pendency of litigation as to the right to legal representation of the testator, was not sufficient ground for the interference of the Court, where there was a legal hand fully qualified. That, in the principal case, the grant of probate had originally constituted complete executors, fully qualified to receive the testator's assets. That the decree for bringing in probate was of course, in a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court, as to the grant of probate, and did not take away the legal title of the executors. That no special case was shewn as to the fund being in danger, or as to the executors requiring the aid of the Court to administer it; and, therefore, that the Court would not exercise its jurisdiction to interfere with them; and an appeal motion from the Master of the Rolls, for an injunction and receiver, was dismissed with costs †.

The leading case on this subject, and the case on which the judgment appears to have been principally grounded, was Watkins v. Brent, (cited supra). It will be observed that all the doctrine in that case, was laid down by way of dictum. The decision was, that the Court would interfere against the executor, on the ground that, by agreeing with the plaintiff that his right should be tried in the Ecclesiastical Court, he had treated himself as not complete executor. Slight circumstances, therefore, would, on the authority of that case, seem sufficient to induce the Court to depart from the rule, that, where there is a person constituted executor, the Court will not interfere merely on the ground of there being a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court touching the right of representation.

It is to be observed, also, that the doctrine laid down in Watkins v. Brent, to some extent, is not consistent with that of some of the earlier cases, a doctrine stated and admitted to be law in Newton v. Ricketts, viz. that if before probate has been granted, a suit is instituted for the purpose of litigating the right of representation, the Court of Chancery will interfere against the executor appointed by the will. Now, it is clear, that the executor derives his authority not from the probate but from the will. His legal title is as complete before as after probate; for, though probate is in a sense an adjudication upon the question whether the alleged will is a will or not, yet the will, if it be valid, does not take its force and validity from the probate. The probate is only evidence of the antecedent fact of validity, and gives no validity if there was none before. That this is so, is proved by the very circumstance, that probate may be recalled, which could not be, or if it could be, could have no effect, if probate of itself gave any force to a will. If this be so,—if an executor's legal title is quite independent of probate; then the cases in which an injunction has been granted to restrain an executor before probate from acting, on the mere ground of litigation of the representation, shew that the Court, in interfering, is not governed by the consideration of there being or not being a legal hand to receive the assets; because it is incontestable, that the executor appointed by the will is prima facie, and until a decree against the will, legally qualified to receive the assets before probate.

* Newton v. Ricketts, Lord Chancellor on appeal, 5th August, 1847, M.S.

† We have above given merely the outline of the case. A report of it will shortly be printed in THE JURIST.

It is to be regretted that this point was scarcely more than touched upon in the argument in Newton v. Ricketts, and it is also to be regretted that the attention of the Court was not more strongly called to the possible effects of the probate having been actually brought into the Ecclesiastical Court,—a circumstance in which it appears to have been distinguishable from Watkins v. Brent*. Now, although the legal title of the executor is not taken away by the mere impounding of the probate, it is impossible to say that the exercise of the legal power is in no way thereby injured or diminished. Many circumstances may arise in which the executor, deprived of the power of producing the probate, may be unable to protect the assets, and the estate may be injured; whereas a receiver, appointed by the Court of Chancery, makes proof of his title by the order of the Court, and is, therefore, independent of the production of the probate. In fact, the executor, deprived of probate, is deprived of the regular evidence of his title; and if, as in Watkins v. Brent, his consenting to let his title be disputed makes an executor not complete executor, surely the being deprived of the evidence of his title is a circumstance as strong, to take from him the completeness of his character of executor. To put an instance, it may be at least questionable whether a debtor to the estate would be bound to accept the receipt of a person calling himself executor, without production of the probate. Clearly, in an action by the executor, the only legitimate evidence of his title is the probate. (Coe v. Masterman, 2 Selw. N. P. 730).

* It does not appear by the report of Watkins v. Brent, whether in that case the probate had been actually brought into the Ecclesiastical Court. If it had, nothing was said in argument on the subject, and the Court does not appear to have noticed the fact.

But there can be no doubt that the production by a receiver of the order appointing him, would justify the debtor in paying, and that, therefore, he would be bound to pay, on the receiver's receipt. Many other cases might be put in which an executor without the probate would be like a trustee without the trust-deed; the person having, indeed, the legal hand, but having it withered and powerless. On the whole, assuming that, in Watkins v. Brent, it was not the fact, or that, if it was, the Court was not apprised of the fact, that the probate was called in, it may be doubted whether the circumstance, that, in Newton v. Ricketts the probate was called in, was not one that brought it within the distinction on which the decision in Watkins v. Brent was based; and it is at least to be regretted that the point was not more strongly and prominently urged upon the attention of the Court in Newton v. Ricketts.

LONDON, AUGUST 21, 1847.

WE propose in the present article to consider several practical points of some importance, which have arisen in the recent actions between committee-men and allottees in railway projects. Our remarks will be confined to the mode of carrying into effect by an action at law the principles which govern the respective liabilities of these parties.

It is clearly admitted, that the letter of application for shares in a railway company, and the letter of allotment at law. But the rule which is applicable to other agreements will also apply to this, namely, that to constitute a legal obligation ex contractu, the offer or proposal must be accepted in the very terms in which it is made. Therefore, if the application for shares be absolute in its form and the letter of allotment conditional, e. g. stating that the shares are allotted on condition that the deposit shall be paid, or stating, that in the event of non-payment such allotment will be void, no valid contract arises. (Wontner v. Shairp, 11 Jur. 373; 4 Railw. Cas. 542). In that case, it was said by the Court, in delivering their judgment, "The allotment was not absolute, but conditional only, and on that ground also we think the application for shares and letter of allotment do not constitute a valid contract, the letter of allotment not being a simple acceptance of the plaintiff's proposal." But if the allottee after such conditional allotment pay the deposit, or thereby accepts the terms thus added, and a new contract arises from the letter of allotment, and the action. (See Vollins v. Fletcher, 11 Jur. 416).

The offer must be accepted by the party to whom it is made or by his agent. Therefore, if the application be to the provisional committee, the allotment should be by them and not by the managing committee. (See Woolmer v. Toby, 16 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 235). From that decision, it appears, that the managing committee are not the agents of the provisional committee.

The allotment should be made within a reasonable time. In Woolmer v. Toby the application was made on the 13th October, and the allotment on the 15th December following. The only question left to the jury by the learned judge was as to the reasonableness of the time, and they found it was reasonable, but the Court above seemed to be of opinion that there was great weight in the objection raised on this point, as a ground for a new trial, as also in the objection, that between the times of application and of allotment, changes had occurred in the constitution of the provisional committee.

The question, whether it is necessary that the letters should be stamped as an agreement, depends upon a previous question, viz. whether the letter of allotment is a simple acceptance of the application? If it be so, they together amount to a contract, and require a stamp. But if the letter of allotment introduce new terms, the real contract will be found therein, and in the subsequent act done, which amounts to an acceptance of such terms. The letters of application and of allotment are then regarded as mere proposals, and no stamp is required. It was so held in Vollins v. Fletcher. That was an action by an allottee against a managing director for recovery of deposits paid. The application for shares had been made in the usual form, and was absolute, but the allotment was conditional; and the Court, on this state of facts, held no stamp to be necessary. "The true test," said Pollock, C. B., "is, whether, on receiving the written answer, which was given to his application, the plaintiff was at liberty to say, 'If these are the terms on which my offer is to be accepted, I decline to accede to them.' We think he was."

The parties to sue and to be sued are, of course, those between whom the contract was made, by themselves or by their agents. In Woolmer v. Toby, it was decided that the committee of management could not sue on a contract made with the provisional committee. But if the allotment introduced new terms into the contract, and the deposit was paid thereon, the parties allotting would be looked upon as contracting with the allottee, although the application had been made to different parties.

In concluding these remarks, it may be useful to refer to the case of Steadman v. Arden, (10 Jur. 553; 15 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 310), in which it was held, that an allottee called upon to pay money in respect of shares allotted to him, is entitled to inspect the subscribers' agreement and parliamentary contract.

An Act to abolish One of the Offices of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery. [2nd July, 1847.]

Sect. 1. Recites 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94, appointing Masters and giving Salaries, &c. to their Clerks. 5 Vict. c. 5, abolishing Master of Exchequer and appointing Mr. Richards. Resignation of Mr. Lynch. One Mastership abolished.

2. Chief and Second Clerks retained for Period not exceeding Twelve Months.

3. Compensation to Chief and Second Clerks.

4. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 94], it was enacted, that the appointment of all Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery should be vested in his Majesty, his heirs and successors, and that such Master should thereafter be appointed by letters patent under the great seal of Great Britain; and it was by the said act also enacted, that the salaries to be paid to the chief and junior clerks of each of the said Masters should be 1000*l.* a year and 150*l.* a year respectively, and that it should be lawful for the said junior clerks to receive and take 1*½*d. per folio of ninety words for every copy of every document or writing made in the office of the said Master: And whereas by an act passed in the 5th year of her present Majesty, [c. 5], Richard Richards, Esq., then one of the Masters of the Court of Exchequer, was appointed as an additional Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and it was thereby enacted, that upon the death, resignation, or removal from office of the said Richard Richards it should be lawful for her said Majesty from time to time, by letters patent under the great seal, to appoint a fit and proper person to supply such vacancy: And whereas Andrew Henry Lynch, Esq., late one of the said Masters in Ordinary, did, on the 25th day of March now last past, duly resign his said office, and the same thereby became and now is vacant: And whereas it is expedient that the number of the said Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery should be reduced to the same number as existed before the passing of the said last-mentioned act: Be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty not to fill up the office so vacant by the resignation of the said Andrew Henry Lynch, but that the same shall be and the same is hereby abolished.

2. That for the convenience of prosecuting the causes and matters referred to the said Andrew Henry Lynch, and now transferred to the other Masters in Ordinary, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he shall think fit, to retain George Barrett and Edward Wright, the late chief and second clerks of the said Andrew Henry Lynch, as chief and second clerks respectively, with all the duties, rights, privileges, and emoluments thereto belonging, as if a Master in Ordinary had been duly appointed to succeed the said Andrew Henry Lynch, but nevertheless for a time not exceeding twelve months from the passing of this act: Provided always, that in the event of the death, resignation, or removal of the said George Barrett and Edward Wright, or either of them, before the expiration of the said twelve months, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he shall think fit, to appoint a successor to them or either of them during the time aforesaid.

3. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, to award such compensation (if any), and in such manner and upon such conditions, as he may think fit, to the said George Barrett and Edward Wright, or either of them, in consideration of the loss they or he may have sustained by the abolition of the said Office of Master in Ordinary.

4. That this Act may be amended or repealed by any Act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

CAP. LXVII.

An Act to amend the Law as to the Custody of Offenders. [9th July, 1847.]

Sect. 1. 5 Geo. 4, c. 84. So much of 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, as enacts that Male Offenders sentenced to Transportation may be kept to hard Labour out of England extended to Offenders convicted in Ireland. 9 & 10 Vic. c. 26.

2. Offenders under Sentence or Order of Transportation may be removed to any Prison in Great Britain.

3. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the 5 Geo. 4, [c. 84] intitled "An Act for the Transportation of Offenders from Great Britain," it was enacted, that it should be lawful for his Majesty, by any order or orders in council, to declare his royal will and pleasure that male offenders convicted in Great Britain, and being under sentence or order of transportation, should be kept to labour in any part of his Majesty's dominions out of England to be named in such order or orders in council: And whereas it is expedient that it should be made lawful to remove to the same places of confinement any male offender convicted in Ireland who would have been removable thereto if he had been convicted in Great Britain: Be it enacted, &c., that it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state to direct, that any male offender convicted in Ireland, and being under sentence or order of transportation, may be removed to and confined and kept to hard labour in any such place of confinement out of England, in like manner as if he had been convicted in Great Britain; and every offender who shall be so removed shall continue in custody, and shall be kept to labour in the place of confinement to be so provided, or any other place of confinement to be from time to time provided by her Majesty out of England, until her Majesty shall otherwise direct, or until the offender shall be entitled to his liberty; and that all the enactments of the said act relating to the returns to be made concerning every person in custody in each of such places of confinement, and the powers and duties of the superintendent and overseer having the custody of any such offender, and to the treatment of such offenders while so confined, and the time during which they shall be so confined, shall, subject to the amendments made in the said act by an act passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled "An Act for abolishing the Office of Superintendent of Convicts under Sentence of Transportation," apply to all such male offenders convicted in Ireland and removed under the authority of this act, as if they had been convicted in Great Britain and removed under the authority of the first-recited act to such places of confinement.

2. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by an order in writing, to be notified in writing by one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, to direct that any persons under sentence or order of transportation within Great Britain shall be removed from the prisons in which they are severally confined to any other of her Majesty's prisons or penitentiaries in Great Britain, there to be confined for such time as her Majesty, by any such order notified as aforesaid, shall direct, not exceeding the time for which they might have been lawfully confined in the prisons from which they shall have been severally removed; and the expense of maintaining any such person in the prison to which he shall be removed under this act, and any other additional expense incurred in such prison by such removal and confinement, shall be defrayed in like manner as the expense of maintaining any such person in any place of confinement appointed under the first-recited act.

3. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

[22nd July, 1847.]

CAP. LXXVIII.

An Act to amend an Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies. [22nd July, 1847.]

- Sect. 1. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. Any Company, having obtained Certificate of complete Registration, being desirous of holding Lands, may apply to the Board of Trade for a Licence, who may, if they see fit, grant the same.
2. Accounts of Licences, Renewals, Extensions, &c. to be annually laid before Parliament.
  3. Licences granted before passing of this Act deemed valid and effectual for the Purposes therein expressed.
  4. So much of recited Act as requires the Return to the Office for Registration of Joint-stock Companies of a Copy of every Prospectus, &c. repealed.
  5. Certain additional Particulars required to be returned to the Office for Registration of Joint-stock Companies.
  6. If any Alterations are made in Particulars registered, they shall be returned to the Registrar under a Penalty.
  7. Penalty on Promoters issuing, at any Time before complete Registration, any Prospectus, &c. containing Statement at Variance with Particulars returned under recited Act.
  8. Penalties under this Act to be sued for as under recited Act.
  9. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 110], intituled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies," it is amongst other things enacted, that on the complete registration of any company being certified in the manner prescribed in the said act, it shall be lawful for such company, amongst other things, to purchase and hold lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the name of such company, or of the trustees or trustee thereof, for the purpose of occupying the same as a place or places of business of the said company, and also (but nevertheless with a licence, general or special, for that purpose, to be granted by the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, first had and obtained), such other lands, tenements, and hereditaments as the nature of the business of the company may require: and whereas doubts have in certain cases arisen as to the meaning of the said provision, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed, and that further provision should be made as to the granting of such licences as aforesaid by the said Committee of Privy Council: be it therefore enacted, &c., that whenever any company, having obtained a certificate of complete registration under the said act, is desirous of purchasing or holding, taking on lease, holding on mortgage, or in any other manner acquiring an interest, such as bodies politic or corporate, are by law incapacitated from acquiring in any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, other than such as it is under the said act entitled to purchase and hold, as a place or places of business, it shall be lawful for such company to make application to the lords of the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade, for a licence to purchase, take, or hold the same; and the lords of the said committee shall thereupon take such application into their consideration, and may, if they see fit, grant a licence to such company accordingly; and in such licence the lords of the said committee may either authorise such company to purchase, take, and again let, sell, or otherwise dispose of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as may in the licence be particularly described, and to hold the same for such time as may be specified in such licence, or in any licence to be subsequently and from time to time granted by the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade on the application of such company, or may authorise them from time to time to acquire, dispose of, and again acquire such lands, tenements, or hereditaments as the company may from time to time desire, or may authorise them to hold lands, tenements, or hereditaments on mortgage, and may frame such licence in such manner, and insert in the same such conditions, as with reference to the special circumstances of each case they may deem expedient; and such licence shall be held to confer upon such company the rights and powers therein expressed to be given in respect of purchasing, holding, and disposing of lands, tenements, or hereditaments as aforesaid.

2. That there shall be presented to both Houses of Parliament in each year, within fourteen days after the commencement of the session, an account of the several licences, and renewals or extensions of licences, so granted by the Committee of the Privy Council for Trade, specifying the nature and extent of the powers contained in each of such licences, and of the lands so authorised to be held, and also, in the case of any renewal or extension of such licences, an account of the extent of land actually held by the company at the time of such renewal or extension, and the counties within which such lands are situate.

3. And whereas certain licences have from time to time been granted by the lords of the said committee in pursuance of the said act; be it enacted, that in case any doubt arise as to the effect thereof it shall be held that any licence so granted before the passing of this act is valid and effectual for the purposes therein expressed, and shall be deemed sufficient evidence that the lands, tenements, or hereditaments therein described or referred to, or which have been purchased, taken, held, or disposed of under the authority thereof, are such as the nature of the business of the company requires.

4. And whereas by the said recited act the promoters of any company formed for any purpose within the meaning of the said act are, amongst other things, required to return to the office for the registration of joint-stock companies a copy of every prospectus or circular, handbill or advertisement, or other such document, at any time addressed to the public, or to the subscribers or others, relative to the formation or modification of such company: And whereas the registration of such prospectuses and advertisements has been found to be very burdensome to the promoters of such companies, and it is desirable to relieve such promoters from the necessity thereof, and in lieu thereof to substitute the provisions hereinafter contained; be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said act as is lastly hereinbefore recited shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

5. That in addition to the particulars which the promoters of every such company as aforesaid are by the said act required to return to the said office for the registration of joint-stock companies, when and as from time to time they shall be decided on, such promoters shall also return, and they are hereby required to return, to the said office, the following additional particulars, so soon as the same shall be decided on; (that is to say),

First. The amount of the proposed capital of the company:

Second. The amount and number of the shares into which the same is to be divided:

And if the said company be dissolved, or be incorporated by act of Parliament, or by royal charter or by the Queen's letters patent, or be in any way withdrawn or supposed to be withdrawn from the operation of the said act, the promoters of the company shall forthwith give notice thereof to the registrar of joint-stock companies.

6. That in case of any alteration being made in any of the particulars registered by the promoters of any company in pursuance of the said recited act or of this act, such alteration shall forthwith be returned to the registrar of joint-stock companies; and if such return be not made within one month after such alteration has been made and decided upon, any promoter of the company shall be liable to forfeit for each and every alteration not returned as aforesaid any sum not exceeding 20*l*.

7. That it shall not be lawful for the promoters of any company, or for any person connected with any company, at any time before such company has obtained a certificate of complete registration under the said recited act, to issue or publish or in any manner address or cause or suffer to be addressed to the public, or to the subscribers or others, any prospectus or circular, handbill or advertisement, or other such document relative to the formation or modification of the company, containing any statement at variance with the particulars which may have been returned to the registrar of joint-stock companies under the said recited act or this act, nor to issue, publish, or in any manner address or cause or suffer to be addressed to the public, or to the subscribers or others, any such prospectus, circular, handbill, or advertisement, containing any statements of particulars which are by the said recited act or by this act directed to be returned to the registrar of joint-stock companies, until such particulars have been so returned; and if any prospectus or circular, handbill or advertisement, be issued, published, or addressed to the public, or to the subscribers or others, contrary hereto, any promoter of the company shall be liable for each and every such issue or publication to forfeit any sum not exceeding 20*l*.

8. That the penalties imposed by this act shall be sued for, recovered, and applied in the same manner as penalties imposed by the said recited act are therein directed to be sued for, recovered, and applied respectively.

9. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in the present session of Parliament.

CAP. LXXIX.

An Act to continue for a limited Time the Provisions for summary Proceedings contained in an Act of the last Session, to amend the Acts for promoting the Drainage of Lands, and for other Purposes; and to amend the said Act. [22nd July, 1847.]

16. Payment of Costs and Expenses with respect to Boroughs, &c.

17. Proceedings against Persons acting under this Act.

18. Extent of Act.

19. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas, in order in certain cases to ensure the more speedy trial of juvenile offenders, and to avoid the evils of their long imprisonment previously to trial, it is expedient to allow of such offenders being proceeded against in a more summary manner than is now by law provided, and to give further power to bail them: Be it enacted &c., That every person who shall, subsequently to the passing of this act, be charged with having committed or having attempted to commit, or with having been an aider, abettor, counsellor, or procurer in the commission of any offence which now is or hereafter shall or may be by law deemed or declared to be simple larceny, or punishable as simple larceny, and whose age at the period of the commission or attempted commission of such offence shall not, in the opinion of the justices before whom he or she shall be brought or appear as hereinafter mentioned, exceed the age of fourteen years, shall, upon conviction thereof, upon his own confession or upon proof, before any two or more justices of the peace for any county, riding, division, borough, liberty, or place in petty sessions assembled, at the usual place, and in open court, be committed to the common gaol or house of correction within the jurisdiction of such justices, there to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three calendar months, or, in the discretion of such justices, shall forfeit and pay such sum, not exceeding 3*l*., as the said justices shall adjudge, or, if a male, shall be once privately whipped, either instead of or in addition to such imprisonment, or imprisonment with hard labour; and the said justices shall from time to time appoint some fit and proper person, being a constable, to inflict the said punishment of whipping when so ordered to be inflicted out of prison: Provided always, that if such justices upon the hearing of any such case shall deem the offence not to be proved, or that it is not expedient to inflict any punishment, they shall dismiss the party charged, on finding surety or sureties for his future good behaviour, or without such sureties, and then make out and deliver to the party charged a certificate under the hands of such justices stating the fact of such dismissal, and such certificate shall and may be in the form or to the effect set forth in the schedule hereto annexed in that behalf: Provided also, that if such justices shall be of opinion, before the person charged shall have made his or her defence, that the charge is from any circumstance a fit subject for prosecution by indictment, or if the person charged shall, upon being called upon to answer the charge, object to the case being summarily disposed of under the provisions of this act, such justices shall, instead of summarily adjudicating thereupon, deal with the case in all respects as if this act had not been passed.

2. That any two or more justices of the peace for any county, riding, division, borough, liberty, or place in petty sessions assembled, and in open court, before whom any such person as aforesaid charged with any offence made punishable under this act shall be brought or appear, are hereby authorised to hear and determine the case under the provisions of this act: Provided always, that any magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis sitting at any such police court, and any stipendiary magistrate sitting in open court, having by law the power to do acts usually required to be done by two or more justices of the peace, shall and may within their respective jurisdictions hear and determine every charge under this act, and exercise all the powers herein contained, in like manner and as fully and effectually as two or more justices of the peace in petty sessions assembled as aforesaid can or may do by virtue of the provisions in this act contained.

3. That every person who shall have obtained such certificate of dismissal as aforesaid, and every person who shall have been convicted under the authority of this act, shall be released from all further or other proceedings for the same cause.

4. And for the more effectual prosecution of offences punishable upon summary conviction by virtue of this act, be it enacted, That where any person whose age is alleged not to exceed fourteen years shall be charged with any such offence on the oath of a credible witness before any justice of the peace, such justice may issue his summons or warrant to summon or to apprehend the person so charged to appear before any two justices of the peace in petty sessions assembled as aforesaid at a time and place to be named in such summons or warrant.

5. That any justice or justices of the peace, if he or they shall think fit, may remand for further examination or for trial, or suffer to go at large upon his or her finding sufficient surety or sureties, any such person as aforesaid charged before him or them with any such offence as aforesaid; and every such surety shall be bound by recognizance to be conditioned for the appearance of such person before the same or some other justice or justices of the peace for further examination, or for trial before two or more justices of the peace in petty sessions assembled as aforesaid, or for trial at some superior court, as the case may be; and every such recognizance may be enlarged from time to time by any such justice or justices to such further time as he or they shall appoint; and every such recognizance which shall not be enlarged shall be discharged without fee or reward, when the party shall have appeared according to the condition thereof.

6. That every fine imposed by any justices under the authority of this act shall be paid to the clerk to the convicting justices, and shall be by him paid over to the use of the general county-rate, or rate in the nature of a general county-rate, for the county, riding, division, borough, liberty, franchise, city, town, or place in which the offence in respect of which such fine shall be imposed may have been committed.

7. That it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace by summons to require the attendance of any person as a witness upon the hearing of any case before two justices, under the authority of this act, at a time and place to be named in such summons; and such justice may require and bind by recognizance all persons whom he may consider necessary to be examined touching the matter of such charge to attend at the time and place to be appointed by him, and then and there to give evidence upon the hearing of such charge; and in case any person so summoned or required or bound as aforesaid shall neglect or refuse to attend in pursuance of such summons or recognizance, then upon proof being first given of such person's having been duly summoned as hereinafter mentioned, or bound by recognizance as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the justices before whom any such person ought to have attended to issue their warrant to compel his appearance as a witness.

8. That every summons issued under the authority of this act may be served by delivering a copy of the summons to the party, or by delivering a copy of the summons to some inmate at such party's usual place of abode, and every person so required, by any writing under the hand or hands of any justice or justices, to attend and give evidence as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have been duly summoned.

9. That the justices before whom any person shall be summarily convicted of any such offence as hereinbefore mentioned may cause the conviction to be drawn up in the form of words set forth in the schedule to this act annexed, or in any other form of words to the same effect, which conviction shall be good and effectual to all intents and purposes.

10. That no such conviction shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of her Majesty's superior courts of record; and no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party has been convicted, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same.

11. That the justices of the peace before whom any person shall be convicted under the provisions of this act shall forthwith thereafter transmit the conviction and recognizance to the clerk of the peace for the county, borough, liberty, or place wherein the offence shall have been committed, there to be kept by the proper officer among the records of the court of general quarter sessions of the peace; and the said clerk of the peace shall transmit to one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State a monthly return of the names, offences, and punishments mentioned in the convictions, with such other particulars as may from time to time be required.

12. That no conviction under the authority of this act shall be attended with any forfeiture, but whenever any person shall be deemed guilty under the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the presiding justices to order restitution of the property in respect of which such offence shall have been committed to the owner thereof or his representatives, and if such property shall not then be forthcoming, the same justices, whether they award punishment or dismiss the complaint, may inquire into and ascertain the value thereof in money, and if they think proper order payment of such sum of money to the true owner, by the person or persons convicted, either at one time or by instalments at such periods as the Court may deem reasonable, and the party or parties so ordered to pay shall be liable to be sued for the same as a debt in any court in which debts may be by law recovered, with costs of suit, according to the practice of such court.

13. That whenever any justices of the peace shall adjudge any offender to forfeit and pay a pecuniary penalty under the authority of this act, and such penalty shall not be forthwith paid, it shall be lawful for such justices, if they shall deem it expedient, to appoint some future day for the payment of such penalty, and to order the offender to be detained in safe custody until the day so to be appointed, unless such offender shall give security to the satisfaction of such justices for his or her appearance on such day; and such justices are hereby empowered to take such security by way of recognizance or otherwise, at their discretion; and if at the time so appointed such penalty shall not be paid, it shall be lawful for the same or any other justices of the peace, by warrant under their hands and seals, to commit the offender to the common goal or house of correction within their jurisdiction, there to remain for any time not exceeding three calendar months, reckoned from the day of such adjudication, such imprisonment to cease on payment of the said penalty.

14. That the justices in petty sessions assembled as aforesaid, before whom any person shall be prosecuted or tried for any offence cognisable under this act, are hereby authorised and empowered, at their discretion, at the request of the prosecutor or of any other person who shall appear on recognizance or summons to prosecute or give evidence against any person accused of any such offence, to order payment to the prosecutor and witnesses for the prosecution of such sums of money as to the justices shall seem reasonable and sufficient to reimburse such prosecutor and witnesses for the expenses they shall have severally incurred in attending before the examining magistrate, and in otherwise carrying on such prosecution, and also to compensate them for their trouble and loss of time therein, and to order payment to the constables and other peace officers for the apprehension and detention of any person or persons so charged; and although no conviction shall actually take place, it shall be lawful for the said justices to order all or any of the payments aforesaid when they shall be of opinion that the parties or any of them have acted bona fide; and the amount of expenses of attending before the examining magistrate, and the compensation for trouble and loss of time therein, and the allowances to the constables and other peace officers for the apprehension and detention of the offender, and the allowances to be paid to the prosecutor, witnesses, and constables for attending at the said petty sessions, shall be ascertained by and certified under the hands of the justices in such petty session assembled as aforesaid: Provided always, that the amount of the costs, charges, and expenses attending any such prosecution, to be allowed and paid as aforesaid, shall not in any one case exceed the sum of 40s.: Provided also, that no expenses shall be allowed to prosecutors, witnesses, and constables exceeding the sums allowed, according to a scale of fees and allowances authorised and settled by the justices of the peace at quarter sessions assembled, according to the statute in such case made and provided with respect to preliminary inquiries before justices of the peace in cases of felony.

15. That every such order of payment to any prosecutor or other person, after the amount thereof shall have been certified by the justices as aforesaid, shall be forthwith made out and delivered by the clerk of the said petty session unto such prosecutor or other person, upon such clerk being paid for the same the sum of 6d. for every such person, and no more, and, except in cases hereinafter provided for, shall be made upon the treasurer of the county, riding, or division in which the offence shall have been committed, or shall be supposed to have been committed, who is hereby authorised and required, upon sight of every such order, forthwith to pay to the person named therein, or to any other person duly authorised to receive the same on his or her behalf, the money in such order mentioned, and shall be allowed the same in his accounts: Provided always, that no such order shall be valid, nor shall such treasurer pay any money thereon, unless it shall have been framed and presented in such form and under such regulations as the justices of the peace in quarter sessions assembled shall from time to time direct.

16. And whereas offences cognizable under this act may be committed in liberties, franchises, cities, towns, and places which do not contribute to the payment of any county rate, some of which raise a rate in the nature of a county rate, and others have neither any such rate nor any fund applicable to similar purposes, and it is just that such liberties, franchises, cities, towns, and places should be charged with all costs, expenses, and compensations ordered by virtue of this act in respect of such offences as aforesaid committed or supposed to have been committed therein respectively; be it therefore enacted, That all sums directed to be paid by virtue of this act in respect of such offences as aforesaid committed or supposed to have been committed in such liberties, franchises, cities, towns, and places shall be paid out of the rate in the nature of a county rate, or out of any fund applicable to similar purposes, where there is such a rate or fund, by the treasurer or other officer having the collection or disbursement of such rate or fund, and where there is no such rate or fund in such liberties, franchises, cities, towns, or places, shall be paid out of the rate or fund for the relief of the poor of the parish or township, district or precinct therein, where the offence was committed or supposed to have been committed, by the overseers or other officers having the collection or disbursement of such last-mentioned rate or fund; and the order of Court shall in every such case be directed to such treasurer, overseers, or other officers respectively, instead of the treasurer of the county, riding, or division, as the case may require.

17. And for the protection of persons acting in the execution of this act, be it enacted, that all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this act shall be laid and tried in the county where the fact was committed, and shall be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action or prosecution, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action or prosecution; and in any such action or prosecution the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient sums shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought by or on behalf of the defendant; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any such action or prosecution after issue joined, or if, upon demurrer or otherwise, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover his full costs as between attorney and client, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant hath by law in other cases; and though a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff in such action, the plaintiff shall not have costs against the defendant, unless the judge before whom the trial shall be shall certify his approbation of the action and of the verdict obtained thereupon.

18. That nothing in this act contained shall extend to Scotland or Ireland.

19. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

SCHEDULE OF FORMS TO WHICH THIS ACT REFERS.

LONDON, AUGUST 28, 1847.

WE call the attention of the Profession to an important act passed during the late session for amending the Joint Stock Companies Act, (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110). It will be recollected, that by the 25th section of that act, it is enacted, that completely registered companies shall have power "to purchase and hold lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the name of the said company, or of the trustees or trustee thereof, for the purpose of occupying the same as a place or places of business of the said company, and also (but nevertheless with a license general or special for that purpose, to be granted by the Committee of the Privy Council for Trade, first had and obtained) such other lands, tenements, and hereditaments as the nature of the business of the company may require."

Upon the effect of this clause much doubt has been entertained. One opinion, and that which we believe has been entertained at the Registrar General's Office, is, that the act by this section does not give power to companies to purchase and hold lands in fee in any case, without the license of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade: a second is, that for the single purpose of the company's offices and the premises strictly connected therewith, a company has power to hold lands under the act without license, e. g. that if the business of a company were the manufacturing of steam-boats, the company would not have power to purchase and hold lands, &c. for the purpose of its building yards, dry and wet docks, &c.—That, in a word, such places are not the place or places of business of the company within the meaning of the act; but that only the company's offices would fall within the parliamentary designation. A third opinion, and we confess we think one which may be contended for with great show of reason, is, that the place or places of business of a company in the act, means the place or places where it carries on generally the business for which it is incorporated, and not merely the office where its deliberations are held and its monetary business transacted. It will be observed, in support of the second and third opinion, that the clause of the act being sub-divided into two branches, shews that the necessity of a license from the Board of Trade is only attached to the circumstances designated in the second branch of the clause;—That in fact the clause is to be read thus: first, the company may purchase lands, &c. to be occupied for its place or places of business, without any license whatever. Secondly, if it requires lands for any purposes other than for occupation as the place or places of its business, it must have a license. The effect of the ambiguous character of this clause on the points above noticed, has been, that, in practice, companies have preferred in many instances taking the risk of whatever consequences may flow from disobedience of the act, to incurring the delay and expense of an application to the Privy Council while others more wealthy have put themselves to, perhaps, unnecessary expense. Another doubt has been, whether a general license by the Privy Council was good for future acquisitions of land, or whether the act does not require a special license for each particular acquisition.

The Legislature, by the act of last session, has removed all doubt as to the last point mentioned, and also as to the question, whether, in all cases, the license of the Privy Council is requisite, but it has still left one doubt subsisting. The 10 & 11 Vict. c. 78, recites the part of the 25th clause of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, above quoted, and that doubts have, in certain cases, arisen, as to the meaning of the said provision, and that it is expedient that such doubts should be removed, &c. And then it enacts, "that, whenever any company, having obtained a certificate of complete registration under the said act, is desirous of purchasing or holding, taking on lease, holding on mortgage, or in any other manner acquiring an interest, such as bodies politic or corporate, are by law incapacitated from acquiring in any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, other than such as it is under the said act entitled to purchase and hold as a place or places of business, it shall be lawful for such company to make application to the Lords of the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade for a license to purchase, take, or hold the same, and the Lords of the said Committee shall thereupon take such application into their consideration, and may, if they see fit, grant a license to such company accordingly; and in such license the Lords of the said Committee may either authorise such company to purchase, take, and again let, sell, or otherwise dispose of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as may in the license be particularly described, and to hold the same for such time as may be specified in such license, or in any license to be subsequently and from time to time granted by the said Committee of Privy Council for Trade, on the application of such company, or may authorise them from time to time to acquire, dispose of, and again acquire such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as the company may from time to time desire, or may authorise them to hold lands, tenements, or hereditaments on mortgage, and may frame such license in such manner, and insert in the same such conditions, as, with reference to the special circumstances of each case, they may deem expedient, and such license shall be held to confer upon such company the rights and powers therein expressed to be given in respect of purchasing, holding, and disposing of lands, tenements, or hereditaments as aforesaid."

Upon this clause, it is plain that the intention is to make the license of the Privy Council requisite wherever any interest in land is to be acquired by a company, (except for occupation as its place of business), which would, if the 7 & 8 Vict. had not been passed, and if the company were any ordinary body corporate, be incapable of being acquired by such company, by reason of its being within the rule as to acquisitions of land in mortmain; and the powers of the Privy Council, and the force of its licenses, are fully ascertained. There will, therefore, be no difficulty in determining what interest in land a company may now hold for purposes other than for its place of business, except the ordinary difficulty that may arise on the general law of mortmain. But the difficulty of construing the words place or places of business remains, and it will still be open to doubt whether a company may hold lands for the purpose of occupation in matters connected more or less with its general business, or whether, by place or places of business, is meant merely a company's offices. There are, of course, many companies whose business is purely official, or quasi official; and as to those no material doubts can arise. But all manufacturing companies have essentially two sorts of places of business; the one where the company's products are manufactured; and the other where they conduct their official and monetary business. We conceive that the broad line of distinction is this: that land required for the actual use of the company and its servants, for transacting that business which, under the act, is stated to be its business, whether that business be manufacturing the products that it is its business to sell, or using the materials that it is its business to use for the purposes for which it is its business to use them, or whether it be keeping its accounts, &c., is land occupied as a place or places of business within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110; but that land used for purposes, which though connected with, and ancillary to, the business of the company, are not essentially parts of its business, as such business is designated in its parliamentary style under the act, is not within the power, and cannot be held without license.

It is obvious, however, that the expression place of business is one of great looseness*; and that even when it shall have received a judicial definition, there must be still many cases in which it will be difficult to say what proceedings constitute the business of a company, and what are only ancillary to it, without being such business itself.

Review.

[Stevens & Norton. 1847.]

This republication, or rather reproduction of the substance, of the Letters which appeared in the "Spectator" during the last long vacation, will be very acceptable to many, as well of those who had the pleasure of reading the original Letters, as of those to whom the pamphlet is entirely new.

"The writer is well aware of his incompetency for commenting on so great a work as a Code of Criminal Law, nor would he have taken up the pen but for the deep alarm which he felt on seeing two of the proposed alterations, viz. the making a capacity to discern the law of the land the sole test of criminal insanity, and the almost complete suppression of the constitutional right of resistance to the exercise of unlawful authority. But feeling compelled to 'deliver his soul' on these matters in as public a manner as he was able, it appeared to him an act of simple justice towards the learned Commissioners, and of some slight benefit to those who may not have leisure to wade—or at least to wade unhelped—through a 'blue book,' to lay the whole work, with its great and manifold merits, before the public, instead of arraigning its authors solely for two (as it seemed to him) glaring and dangerous errors." (Preface).

The subordinate design of laying the whole work of the very able Commissioners before the public, gives occasion for several interesting discussions; but the most important part of the essay is that which is devoted to the examination of the "two glaring and dangerous errors." In the author's condemnation of the second of these—the almost complete suppression of the right of resistance to the exercise of unlawful authority—we entirely concur; but we have room only for a brief notice of the argument against the Commissioners' definition of criminal capacity. We think that the * Legal sense it can hardly be said to have; and its popular sense is very vague; a small trader calls his shop his place of business; a manufacturer usually calls the entirety of his works his place of business, and his office he distinguishes by the name of his counting-house. And we apprehend that a person who has a factory in the country, and a magazine and office in London for the sale of his goods and the counting department of his business, would call the one or the other his place of business, according to his own immediate locality at the time of speaking. He would, to the inquiry of a person in London, designate his London office as his place of business; and to a country inquirer near his factory, would call that his place of business.

Commissioners are right, and that the ingenious author of the Letters has fallen into the popular error of considering the theatres of the criminal law—the courts of justice and the gaols—as comprising the entire field of its action, and affording all the examples that can be required for illustrating its operation; forgetting that prosecutions and punishments are the proppria legum,—vindictions, indeed, of the supremacy of society, but also records of the partial discomfiture, not the triumph, of its laws. This error infects our author's argument from the very first sentence. He says, (p. 4),

"It is well stated by the first Criminal Law Commissioners in their Seventh Report, p. 17, that 'the object of the penal law is the prevention of injury through fear of suffering.' The determination of those cases in which the fear of suffering sought to be produced does or does not operate, constitutes, therefore, the very keystone of the penal law; and we cannot too closely or maturely weigh the first section of the proposed code—'Of Incapacity to commit Crimes, and of Duress.'"

If the efficacy of the penal law is the only thing to be considered in criticising it, the criterion suggested in the above extract is not a necessary deduction from the definition there cited. For aught that appears, the fear of suffering may be more effectually called into action for the prevention of crime, by inflicting punishment in certain cases where that fear could not have existed, than by confining the application of the law to those cases in which it may be supposed to have been present. Indeed, if we were not anxious, in discussing a question of so much practical importance, to avoid all appearance of ergotage, we might reply to the author of the Letters, that a penal code which would bear his test must be so framed as to be incapable of administrative execution. Its prisons and scaffolds would be mere phantasmagoria. For the fear of suffering mentioned in the Commissioners' definition must, of course, be understood to be a fear sufficient for the purpose—a motive stronger than the desire to which it is placed in opposition—a fear, therefore, which cannot exist when the crime is committed. To propose to punish only in cases where such a fear can be supposed to have existed, is to propose that punishment should never be inflicted—a scheme which is seriously insisted on by the Phrenologists, or at least a considerable section of them, who would make the operations of justice exclusively curative, and convert the penal code into a collection of moral prescriptions; though it is to be observed that some of them lay so much stress on the distastefulness of reformatory discipline as to induce a suspicion that, in practice, they would be apt to put the change upon their patients, and, like some heads of schools and of families, make a punishment of physic.

Punishment, then, is threatened for the purpose of influencing those who can be influenced by the threat; it is inflicted in order to seal the threat—to give effect to it by shewing that it is made in earnest, and not at all with any view towards the criminal, unless he is imprisoned or put to death for the protection of society from his future acts, and in that aspect it is precaution, not punishment. The penal code addresses itself to the future innocents of society, not to its offenders in embryo; it does not address itself to the latter, for it would be useless to do so, and when it deals with them it is only as a means to an end with which they are not concerned. In discussing, therefore, the immediate policy of a penal code, we have not to consider the relation between the punishment and the criminal, but solely the effect which punishing him will produce upon others. The moral and religious defensibility of the punishment is a totally different question.

As the Spectator's correspondent could not mean to prohibit all punishment, it is obvious that he must have had in his mind some other distinction or test of criminal responsibility than that suggested in the above extract. He was thinking, in short, as we shall see, of the distinction between educational or moral, and organic or physical, causes of depravity. He defines three classes of irresponsible acts:—1. "Where there simply exists no power of electing to abstain from the forbidden act rather than be punished" (mistake, accident, infancy, idiotcy, insanity, &c.):—2. "Where the power of so abstaining is forcibly taken away," (physical compulsion, which, as it involves no moral process of any kind, does not belong to the subject at all), and:—3. "Where the certainty of present suffering prevails against the dread of future penalties," (i. e. cases of duress, where the penal code of the state is outbid by the extempore enactment of a rebel). Confining his attention to the first category, our author enters upon a very interesting discussion of the principal legal and medical authorities on insanity, with reference to criminal responsibility. Noticing three great classes of mental aberration, viz. mania or general delirium, monomania, and imbecility, and passing over the first and last as presenting no difficulty, he adopts the modern medical subdivision of monomania into two classes, delusive and instinctive; that is to say, intellectual and moral—aberration of the perceptive or reasoning faculties and aberration of the will—the latter kind not being, as it seems, recognised by our law, (see a discussion of that question, ante p. 146). Of instinctive monomania, he cites some of the least hacknied instances:—

"Still more striking are the cases in which the instinctive tendency to homicide has actually yielded to medical treatment, or to certain bodily influences. Thus, Catherine Olhaver, born in 1789, and whose mother had once experienced towards herself the homicidal impulse, became at thirty-two nurse in the house of a professor at Greifswaldau. She was of a mild and gay disposition, and very fond of her charge. One Sunday evening, being alone with her master's two children, she sees a knife on the table, and feels the wish to cut the baby's throat. Wrestling with the temptation, she lays him on the bed, and runs down to the kitchen, flinging away the knife, and entreating her fellow servant to go out with her, at all events not to leave her, because she had evil thoughts: the other refused, having work to do, and the unfortunate nurse returns to the children, pursued by her impulse; succeeds in putting them to bed, again beseeches the cook to take her place by their side, and is again refused, falls asleep, and is suddenly awakened up by the murderous impulse strong within her, but, restrained probably by the presence of the child's mother and aunt, who had now returned, and slept in the room, tosses all night on her bed, exclaiming, 'What horrid thoughts, what absurd thoughts!' On the Monday she is treated medically, and improves: in the night, however, the impulse recurs, and she instantly jumps down from her bed, and takes her medicine: on Tuesday she reveals all to her mistress, and no new fit subsequently occurred."

Our author's conclusion from all this is, that the Commissioners' test of criminal responsibility (capacity to understand that the act is forbidden by the law) is inapplicable to insanity, and he adopts the rule indicated by Marc: "In criminal cases, the chief difficulty resides in the establishing before justice the morality of an act, by distinguishing whether it be the effect of perversity, of passion, or of a mental lesion: in other words, if, in a penal sense, it should be considered as voluntary or involuntary."—"In a penal sense,"—but that is the very question, and the first part of the sentence does not contain the solution of it. Our author adds:—"In a word, the question of responsibility narrows itself to this: Was the force of the delusion or insane impulse such as to destroy the self-control of the offender?" In a subsequent passage, he says:—"I am aware that the modification which I propose is a grave one, for it involves no less than a total change in the question proposed to juries. I contend, that if we wish to avoid the risk of innovations so murderous as those of the Commissioners, founded, however, on the most plausible reasoning, the question should no longer be put to the jury, whether the accused, at the time of doing the act, knew the difference between [legal] right and wrong, but whether he was so mad that he could not help doing it."

The argument is carried no further. The writer (in common with other writers on the same side) seems to consider that he has done enough in shewing that there may exist an irresistible insane impulse to commit crime apart from any insane delusion. But the question is, why should greater favour be shewn to an insane impulse than to any other? Is that conclusion assumed because it is thought too obvious to require proof? We think that the contrary is much more obvious, though the investigation of the limits of responsibility is, when pursued into details, one of the most obscure and difficult in social ethics. Every impulse which prevails is an irresistible impulse in the same sense in which an insane impulse is irresistible; and the form of our author's proposed question to juries may just as reasonably be adapted to the case of a "noted thief" as to that of a monomaniac—"Was the prisoner such a thief that he could not help doing it?" A man, sane in the common acceptation of the word, receives a strong provocation and feels an almost unconquerable desire to kill another. It is for a long time doubtful whether he will not yield to the impulse,—at last Minerva takes him aside, and moral or prudential considerations prevail. If the criminal impulse had conquered,—if it had been irresistible, (i. e. irresistible by the forces at command), all agree that he would have been punishable. How is this case distinguished from that of Catherine Olhaven? The impulse was the same,—equally involuntary in its origin,—equally liable to opposition, and actually opposed with success, by the same motives, yet, if Olhaven had yielded, our author would have spared her, as the subject of an irresistible impulse.

Now, still bearing in mind that we are considering only the efficacy of the law, what would have happened if the sane part of Olhaven's character had been different,—if she had been cruel, without affection, without conscience, interested, but having no considerable interest at stake,—and if she had lived under laws allowing full immunity to 'instinctive' crimes? Is it not plain that the one restraint necessary and sufficient for the protection of her charge would have been withheld by that society which was bound to protect it? It is the peculiarity of these cases of moral insanity, especially when accompanied, as commonly happens, with delusion, that (notwithstanding some striking instances to the contrary, on which too much stress has been laid) the ordinary moral restraints do not usually exist in any force; and, therefore, it is doubly important that the only remaining check, the fear of punishment, should not be taken away. The murderer of Mr. Drummond may be said to have been suffering under an insane impulse as well as an insane delusion, though the medical witnesses deposed only to the existence of the latter. He escaped, from the defective administration of the law, which clearly required his punishment, for what he insanely believed would not, if it had been true, have justified his act. Our own opinion is, that there is no specific distinction between sanity and insanity, any more than between a good and a bad watch; but, be that as it may, it is certain that the adoption of our author's proposition would be followed by the most deplorable consequences. Of this, indeed, we have already had some experience, since the plea of insanity has grown into fashion and favour with juries. We remember to have seen depicted in the Charivari, an interview between a prisoner and his advocate: "Have you no defence?" "None whatever,—there are several witnesses, and I have already been ten times convicted of picking pockets." "Oh, then, make yourself easy: I shall plead monomania!" Our author would proclaim absolute immunity to a class of criminals which has already been treated too indulgently. It is the characteristic of weak minds to be subject to strong impressions from sympathy; and hence it happens that great crimes committed without any apparent motive are often followed by imitations. Such crimes are the only ones that can excite extensive sympathy; few persons can imagine themselves suicides from hopeless misery, or murderers from cupidity, revenge, jealousy, &c., because few can bring home to themselves the accompanying circumstances, and the character to be influenced by them; but, to surrender the will to the impulses of the imagination is what many weak minds know themselves liable to, and must sympathise with, and may easily proceed from feeling that it may happen to believing that it has happened. A few years ago a lady, "perfectly sane," as the phrase goes, while ascending the outside of the spire at Strasburg, expressed great horror at the idea of jumping off, and proceeded but a few steps further, when, the imagination of such a resolution having become a reality, she took the leap. A similar impulse may have been experienced by many, but not in such intensity as to overcome the instinct of self-preservation. For one case in which an hallucination of this kind becomes too strong to be restrained by any means, there may be a hundred, where it can be kept in check by the fear of punishment, and by that only. Many lunatics have been prevented from inflicting desperate injuries on themselves, merely by threats of punishment. "They can't punish us, we are mad," has been said more than once within the walls of a lunatic asylum.

We trust we have said enough to shew that the rationale of punishment allows of no exception in favour of offences caused by instinctive or moral insanity. Whether the infliction of punishment upon offenders from such causes can be defended on moral grounds is a very different question, and one into which our author does not enter. To punish a man for an offence which is the result of diseased organisation, and which, as is said, a timely dose of jalap might have prevented, certainly does not harmonise with common notions; the sentiment of abhorrence and the desire of vengeance, which usually reconcile us to the suffering of the offender, cannot exist here. Yet if we compare insanity with the more usual causes of crime, we shall not easily find any distinction to the purpose. On the one hand, a Pinel may shew the origin of the disease, point out its future course, demonstrate that no palliatives, no threats, no persuasions can arrest its course or prevent its operation, that the patient is blameless of the cause, and therefore irresponsible for the consequences; but, on the other hand, a Chadwick can point out in our large towns whole districts over which a moral miasma perpetually hovers,—where, of every hundred children, ninety-nine, already "in the gristle," must harden into the bone of felonhood,—must acquire such depraved habits and instincts, not to say also convictions and delusions, as will irresistibly force them during their lives to wage incessant warfare with the laws. True, the causes of the depraved instincts are educational or moral, not organic or physical, but the effect is inevitable, and the sufferer is as innocent of the perversion of his will as the lunatic is of his ailment, and is, to our sympathies, as much an object of pity.

It may be replied that we are not justified in insisting on the cases of punishment actually inflicted in ordinary cases, because the necessity for actual punishment is not contemplated by the theory of the criminal law, but is merely a defect to which the law, like other human institutions, is liable in practice; in other words, that, if the detection and punishment of offences were certain, there would be no offenders, at least no sane ones; but if offences prompted by insane and ungovernable instinct were punished, such punishment would be part of the theory, not a mere accidental defect in the working, of the law. This is a plausible and, to some extent, a sound distinction, but it is not sufficient for the purpose. The actual infliction of punishment must be contemplated by a complete theory of criminal law, because no theory constructed with a view to practice is complete, unless it takes account of the imperfections incident to practice; our argument therefore, founded on the admitted propriety of punishment in some cases, remains untouched. But further, it is not true, that, even independently of considerations of imperfect administration, any theory of law can contemplate the non-necessity of punishment under any circumstances. It may be true, that, if the detection and punishment of every offender could be made to follow immediately and infallibly on the commission of the offence, there would be an end of a large, perhaps the largest, class of offences—those committed in the hope of impunity; but even under such a Utopian system, ample employment for the licitor would be furnished by those who offend in defiance of the law, under the impulse of various ungovernable passions not yet exclusively appropriated to the insane. Such, at least, must be the case until a Perillus is found to invent, and a Draco to enact, some universal torture more abhorrent to the instinct of every possible individual, than the gratification of any conceivable sane impulse. In the meantime we must protect society provisionally. If it is justifiable for the benefit of society to punish offenders who would not exist but for the imperfection of its institutions, the same end will justify the punishment of offenders who would not be such but for the defect of their own organisation. The punishment of the insane is proper, if it prevents more suffering than it inflicts.

For these reasons, we think that our author has not made out his case;—but he has done good service by raising the question clearly, and in a manner that must lead to further inquiries. Few subjects stand more in need of popular discussion than the theory of punishment; crime is increasing, and the humanity-mongers are pushing their trade with success among the soft-hearted and soft-headed.

CAP. LXXXIII.

An Act for the Naturalization of Aliens. [22nd July, 1847.]

Sect. 1. *All Acts, &c. of Colonial Legislatures imparting Privileges of Naturalization valid.*2. *All Laws, &c. hereafter made imparting Privileges of Naturalization valid, but subject to Confirmation or Disallowance by her Majesty.*3. *7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, not to extend to Colonies or Possessions abroad.*4. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas by divers acts, statutes, or ordinances enacted by the legislatures of divers of her Majesty's colonies or possessions abroad provision hath been made for imparting to divers aliens there resident the privileges or some of the privileges of naturalization, to be exercised and enjoyed within the respective limits of such colonies and possessions respectively: And whereas doubts have arisen as to the competency of the said legislatures to enact any such laws, statutes, or ordinances, and as to the validity of the same when so enacted, and it is expedient that such doubts be removed: Be it therefore and it is hereby declared and enacted, &c., That all acts, statutes, and ordinances heretofore made and enacted by the legislatures of any of her Majesty's colonies and possessions abroad for imparting to any person or persons the privileges or any of the privileges of naturalization, to be by such person or persons exercised and enjoyed within the respective limits of such colonies or possessions respectively, shall within such limits have and be taken and reputed to have had from the time of the enactment thereof respectively all such and the same force and effect as doth by law belong to any other law, statute, or ordinance made or enacted by any such respective legislatures.

2. That all laws, statutes, and ordinances which shall hereafter be made and enacted by the legislatures of any of her Majesty's colonies or possessions abroad for imparting to any person or persons the privileges or any of the privileges of naturalization, to be by any such person or persons exercised and enjoyed within the limits of any such colonies and possessions respectively, shall within such limits have the force and authority of law, any law, statute, or usage to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding: Provided nevertheless, that all such laws, statutes, and ordinances shall be made and enacted in such manner and form, and subject to and in conformity with all such rules as now are or hereafter shall be in force in respect of other laws, statutes, or ordinances enacted or to be enacted by any such legislatures respectively, and shall and may be confirmed or disallowed by her Majesty in such and the same manner, and subject to the same rules and regulations as extend or as shall hereafter extend to the confirmation or disallowance of any other such laws, statutes, or ordinances.

3. And whereas a certain act was made and enacted in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 66.] intitled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Aliens:" And whereas doubts have arisen whether the said recited act of the 7 & 8 Vict. extends to and is in force in her Majesty's colonies or possessions abroad; now it is hereby further enacted and declared, That the said recited act of the 7 & 8 Vict., or any part of it, doth not extend to the said colonies or possessions, or to any of them.

4. That this act may be amended or repealed by any other act of this present session of Parliament.

CAP. XCVI.

An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees. [22nd July, 1847.]

- Sect. 1. Trustees may pay Trust Monies or transfer Stocks and Securities into the Court of Chancery. Receipt of Bank Cashier, or Certificate of proper Officer, to be sufficient Discharge.
- 2. Court of Chancery to make Orders on Petition, without Bill, for Application of Trust Monies and Administration of Trust.
- 3. Regulating Salary of Accountant-General.
- 4. Lord Chancellor, with Master of the Rolls, &c., may make General Orders.
- 5. Construction of Expression "Lord Chancellor."
- 6. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas it is expedient to provide means for better securing trust funds, and for relieving trustees from the responsibility of administering trust funds in cases where they are desirous of being so relieved: be it enacted, &c., that all trustees, executors, administrators, or other persons, having in their hands any monies belonging to any trust whatsoever, or the major part of them, shall be at liberty, on filing an affidavit shortly describing the instrument creating the trust, according to the best of their knowledge and belief, to pay the same, with the privity of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, into the Bank of England, to the account of such Accountant-General in the matter of the particular trust, (describing the same by the names of the parties, as accurately as may be, for the purpose of distinguishing it), in trust to attend the orders of the said court; and that all trustees or other persons having any annuities or stocks standing in their name in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or of the East India Company, or South Sea Company, or any government or parliamentary securities standing in their names, or in the names of any deceased persons of whom they shall be personal representatives, upon any trusts whatsoever, or the major part of them, shall be at liberty to transfer or deposit such stocks or securities into or in the name of the said Accountant-General, with his privity, in the matter of the particular trust, (describing the same as aforesaid), in trust to attend the orders of the said court; and in every such case the receipt of one of the cashiers of the said bank for the money so paid, or, in the case of stocks or securities, the certificate of the proper officer, of the transfer or deposit of such stocks or securities, shall be a sufficient discharge to such trustees or other persons for the money so paid, or the stocks or securities so transferred or deposited.

2. That such orders as shall seem fit shall be from time to time made by the High Court of Chancery in respect of the trust monies, stocks, or securities so paid in, transferred, and deposited as aforesaid, and for the investment and payment of any such monies, or of any dividends or interest on any such stocks or securities, and for the transfer and delivery out of any such stocks and securities, and for the administration of any such trusts generally, upon a petition to be presented in a summary way to the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls, without bill, by such party or parties, as to the Court shall appear to be competent and necessary in that behalf; and service of such petition shall be made upon such person or persons as the Court shall see fit and direct; and every order made upon any such petition shall have the same authority and effect, and shall be enforced and subject to re-hearing and appear, in the same manner as if the same had been made in a suit regularly instituted in the court; and if it shall appear that any such trust funds cannot be safely distributed without the institution of one or more suit or suits, the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls may direct any such suit or suits to be instituted.

3. Provided always, and be it enacted, that the additional remuneration which the said Accountant-General may receive in consequence of the operation of this act shall not have the effect of giving to him any claim for a larger income by way of salary or otherwise, in the event of the said office of Accountant-General being hereafter regulated by competent authority, than would have been assigned to him if this act had not been passed.

4. That the Lord Chancellor, with the assistance of the Master of the Rolls or of one of the Vice-Chancellors, shall have power, and is hereby authorised to make such orders as from time to time shall seem necessary for better carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

5. That, in the construction of this act, the expression "the Lord Chancellor" shall mean and include the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, and Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain for the time being.

6. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

CAP. XCVII.

An Act for the Discontinuance of the Attendance of the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery in the Public Office, and for transferring the Business of such Public Office to the Affidavit Office in Chancery. [22nd July, 1847.]

- Sect. 1. Attendance of Masters in Ordinary discontinued.
- 2. Lord Chancellor may appoint a second Assistant Clerk of Affidavits.
- 3. Lord Chancellor may order Remuneration to be paid to the Clerk and Assistant of Affidavits.
- 4. Appointment of second Assistant Clerk of Affidavits. Saving Rights of W. T. Smith.
- 5. Lord Chancellor may also, with Consent of Treasury, order retiring Annuities to disabled Officers, not exceeding two-thirds of their Salaries.
- 6. Commencement of Act.
- 7. Out of what Fund Compensations awarded under Provisions of 10 & 11 Vic. c. 60, to be paid.
- 8. Lord Keeper may act for Lord Chancellor for Purposes of this Act.
- 9. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the thirteenth year of his late Majesty Charles the Second it was amongst other things enacted, that from and after the 23rd day of October, 1661, there should be one public office kept as near the Rolls as conveniently might be, in which the Masters in Ordinary, or one of them, should constantly attend for the administration of oaths and other purposes therein mentioned: And whereas it is expedient that the said Masters should no longer attend in person at the said public office, and that the duties required by the said recited act should be otherwise provided for: Be it therefore enacted, &c., that the said act shall be and the same is hereby repealed, and that the attendance of the said Masters at the public office be discontinued from and after the time at which this act shall come into operation.

2. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint one fit and proper person to assist in the performance of the duties of the clerk of affidavits and of the assistant clerk of affidavits, and of the other duties hereby transferred to them, to be called the second assistant clerk of affidavits, and that the duties by the said recited act directed to be done and performed by the Masters in Ordinary in the public office shall hereafter be done and performed by the said clerk of affidavits and the assistant clerks of affidavits, in such place and in such manner and subject to such regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct, and they and each of them are hereby authorised to do and perform the same.

3. That there shall be paid to the said clerk of affidavits and the said assistant clerks of affidavits such remuneration, either in salary and fees, or partly by salary and partly by fees, as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit, not exceeding in the whole 1200*l.* to the clerk of affidavits, 800*l.* to the first and 400*l.* to the second assistant clerk of affidavits; and that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to make such order and orders as may be necessary for payment of so much of such remuneration as shall consist of salary out of the fund intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," and for the payment of any part of the fees to be received to the account of the said fund.

4. That William Thodey Smith, the present clerk of the said public office, be and he is hereby appointed the second assistant clerk of affidavits under this act, and that the salary or remuneration he shall receive under the provisions of this act shall be and the same is hereby declared to be in lieu of and as compensation for the loss sustained by him in respect of the fees hitherto received by him as clerk of the said public office: Provided always, and it is hereby declared, that this act shall not take away, diminish, or in any way prejudice the rights and interests of William Thodey Smith to and in the compensation granted, awarded, and ordered to be paid to him under and by virtue of the three several acts of Parliament hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, an act made and passed in the 1 & 2 Will 4, [c. 55], intituled "An Act to establish a Court in Bankruptcy," an act made and passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 103], intituled "An Act for abolishing certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery in England," and an act made and passed in the 6 & 7 Vict. [c. 73], intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending several of the Laws relating to Attorneys and Solicitors practising in England and Wales; and that the rights and interests of the said William Thodey Smith under each of the said acts respectively shall be and continue the same to all intents and purposes as if this act had not been passed, and as if he had continued to hold his office of clerk of the public office, but nevertheless only for such period as he shall hold the office of second clerk of affidavits under this act.

5. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by any order made on a petition presented to him for that purpose after the 10th August next after the passing of this act, to order (if he shall think fit) to be paid to any person executing the office of clerk of affidavits, assistant clerk of affidavits, or second assistant clerk of affidavits, or of chief clerk or junior or copying clerk to the Master in Ordinary of the Court of Chancery, who shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and shall be desirous of resigning the same, an annuity not exceeding two-third parts of the yearly salary which such person shall be entitled to at the time of presenting such petition, to be paid out of the interest and dividends of the Government or Parliamentary securities which may be at any time standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery to an account intituled "Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Sutors of the High Court of Chancery," and an account intituled "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Sutors of the High Court of Chancery," or either of them; and the annuity mentioned in such order shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England out of the interest and dividends aforesaid (but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and other sums of money by any act of Parliament already directed or authorised to be paid thereout) by even and equal payments on the 5th January, the 5th April, the 5th July, and the 10th October, in every year during the life of such person; and the executors and administrators of such person shall be entitled to receive and shall be paid such proportionate part of the said annuity as shall have accrued from the next preceding quarterly day of payment to the day of his death.

6. That this act shall commence and take effect from the 10th August next.

7. And whereas by an act passed in this session of Parliament [c. 60], intituled "An Act to abolish one of the Offices of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, it was enacted, that it should be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, to award such compensation (if any), and in such manner and upon such conditions as he might think fit, to George Barrett and Edward Wright, the late chief and second clerks of Andrew Henry Lynch, or either of them, in consideration of the loss they or he may have sustained by reason of the abolition of the said office by the said act: And whereas no provision was made in the said act for the payment of such compensation; be it therefore enacted, that such compensation shall be paid by the Accountant-General, by virtue of an order for that purpose to be made by the said Lord Chancellor, out of the fund intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account."

8. That in construing this act all things directed to be done by the Lord Chancellor shall and may be done by a Lord Keeper or the First Commissioner for the Custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

9. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed during the present session of Parliament.

Just published, in 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 25s. boards,

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuriis in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 4, 1847.

THE doctrine of the alienability or inalienability of the emoluments attached to public offices or employments, has been frequently much misunderstood, principally, however, in reference to the application of the doctrine of public policy, and not on account of any doubt what that doctrine in itself is.

It is perfectly clear that the law will not allow the emoluments of an office to be alienated, where the separation of those emoluments from the office to which they were annexed, would be inconsistent with public policy; but it is not, therefore, to be assumed that every office in the nature of a public office is within the rule, nor that it is, in fact, inconsistent with public policy in every case, that the enjoyment of the emoluments of an office should be in one person, while the office remains in another. In the well-known case of military half-pay, such half-pay is not merely a reward for past services, but a retainer for future services, and not merely a retainer given for the purpose of entitling the Crown to the future services of its officers, but a provision made for their subsistence, in order that they may be at all times in a state of circumstances qualifying them to be ready to serve on the shortest possible notice. If, therefore, in the language of Lord Langdale, in Grenfell v. The Dean and Canons of Windsor, (see 2 Beav. 549), "they were permitted to deprive themselves of their half-pay, they might be rendered unable promptly to enter upon their duties when called upon, and the public service would thereby be greatly injured."

So, in The Duke of Marlborough's case, (1 Swanst. 74), where a pension given as a reward for the public services of the Duke of Marlborough, "for the more honourable support of the dignities" of the Duke and his posterity, was held inalienable; it was so on the ground, according to Lord Langdale, (see 2 Beav. 550), that one of the objects of giving the pension, viz. for having a perpetual memorial of national gratitude for public services, would be entirely lost. It was, therefore, assumed as a fact, that, indirectly, the loss of the pension to the representative of the person originally pensioned, would be detrimental to the public service. It is not to be overlooked that this reasoning of Lord Eldon's in the Marlborough case, is, like many of his Lordship's reasonings, somewhat overfine and far-fetched; and that it is difficult, consistently with it, to sustain the distinction thought to be well established, and, in fact, laid down by his Lordship in that very case, between pensions for past and pensions for future services, wherever, at least, the services are at all real services. But whether the reasoning was right or wrong, the result sought by it was to establish, as a conclusion of fact, that the public benefit was concerned in the continued annexation of the emoluments granted by the State, to the person of the grantee of the State.

VOL. XI.

This principle was more fully expounded and acted upon by Lord Langdale in the case already cited, (Grenfell v. Dean and Canons of Windsor), in which his Lordship held, that the profits of a canonry, where there was no cure of souls, and it did not appear that the services to be performed by the canons were in any way for the benefit of the public, or for the maintenance of the dignity of the Sovereign, but merely services for the benefit of the canon himself, were assignable. His Lordship has, in a still more recent case, acted upon the same doctrine, and held the emoluments of the fellowship of a college assignable.

It was attempted, in the case referred to, (Fistel v. King's College, ante, p. 506), to be contended that the alienation of the emoluments of a fellowship was contrary to public policy, because it was contrary to the intention of the founder, and because public policy required the intention of the founder to be carried out. But Lord Langdale inquired into the nature of the services, and having satisfied himself that they were services not for the public benefit, except in a remote degree, but for the benefit of the college and the fellows, held that the alienation of the emoluments was not contrary to public policy. "The advantages to the fellows," said his Lordship, "which are annexed to the fellowship are very great, and when well used by a studious and well-conducted person may secure to himself the means of acquiring independence and distinction in life, and may secure to the world some fruits of his useful pursuits, but the easy duties which are annexed to it are duties which seem to be intended for the purpose and benefit of the college, and not for the public, otherwise than in a secondary and remote sense, as it is for the benefit of society, that is, for the benefit of the public, that all lawful trusts shall be duly executed, and all lawful contracts duly performed. The fellow of a college may be summoned to attend the meetings of the other fellows; and, if he attends, he may vote in the election of officers; assist in what this defendant thinks proper to call the due administration of justice between the fellows; and assist in carrying into effect the statutes; but the defendant himself distinctly admits that the office, situation, or post of senior fellow, now held by him, is not an office in any way connected with the administration of justice, or an ecclesiastical office of any nature or character; that there is not any cure of souls attached thereto; and he not only denies that there is any provision in the statutes, rules, or regulations of the college which renders it incumbent on him to be resident in the college, but says, that, if there be any such rule, it has long ceased to be, or to be considered, binding on the fellows."

From these authorities it may be collected, that in cases turning on the alienability of emoluments arising out of public offices, or out of offices which, though not conferred by the State, are in the nature of public offices, the principal question to be ascertained is one of fact, whether there are any duties or services performed, or which may be required to be performed, in return for the emoluments, which are, in any clear and definite sense, for the benefit of the public; or whether the performance of the services is only for the benefit of the public, in the wide sense in which every citizen may be said to be benefiting the public, when he performs a duty of private obligation. If the services are of the first class, they will be held inalienable; contra, if they are of the second class.

CAP. XCVIII.

An Act to amend the Law as to Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction in England. [22nd July, 1847.]

- SECT. 1. Bishop to exercise Jurisdiction throughout his Diocese, save in Causes testamentary.
- 2. Officers of Diocesan Courts to account for all Fees, &c. received by them.
- 3. Jurisdiction in Causes testamentary to continue unaltered by Change of Province, &c.

- 4. Law of Bona Notabilia to continue unaltered by Change of Province, &c.
- 5. Certain Authorities may continue to grant Marriage Licences as heretofore. Jurisdiction of Bishops to grant Licences not to be interfered with.
- 6. Temporary Provisions of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77, continued by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 68, to cease on 2nd November, 1847.
- 7. Commencement and Continuance of Act.
- 8. Confirming certain Acts of Jurisdiction.
- 9. Officers appointed under this Act to be subject to Regulations hereafter made by Parliament.
- 10. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas much inconvenience ensues from the continued suspension of the jurisdiction of the several diocesan courts in England within those parts of the dioceses which have been added therunto under the authority of an act passed in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 77], intituled "An Act for carrying into Effect the Reports of the Commissioners appointed to consider the State of the Established Church in England and Wales, with reference to Ecclesiastical Duties and Revenues, so far as they relate to Episcopal Dioceses, Revenues, and Patronage;" and it is expedient that some remedy be thereto applied: be it enacted &c., that the bishop of every diocese in England shall by himself or his officers exercise throughout the whole of his diocese as it now is or hereafter may be limited or constituted, save only in causes and matters testamentary or relating to the administration of the personal estate of intestates, the same jurisdiction and authority which before the passing of this act he or any bishop lawfully could or might exercise by himself or his officers within any part of such diocese.

2. That the officers of the several diocesan and other courts shall keep an account in writing of the gross and net amount of all fees, allowances, gratuities, perquisites, and emoluments received by them respectively on account of their several offices or employments in respect of any causes or matters arising within the diocese which during the continuance of the temporary provisions of the first-recited act were not within the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese or other ecclesiastical authority, and shall from time to time, once at least in every quarter of a year, and, on demand, at any other time, pay over the net amount thereof to the treasurer of the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, to be by him carried to a separate account, and retained until Parliament shall provide for the appropriation thereof; and in case any person required to pay over any money under this act shall die or resign or be dismissed from his office while any such money remains unpaid by him, the executors or administrators of the person so dying, or the person himself so resigning or dismissed, shall be required to pay the balance of the money so remaining due and unpaid.

3. That the jurisdiction of every ecclesiastical court in England in causes and matters testamentary or relating to the administration of the personal estate of intestates shall continue unaltered by any change of province, diocese, archdeaconry, or other jurisdiction whatsoever within the same limits and in like manner as was by law allowed before the passing of the hereinbefore recited act.

4. That the law of bona notabilia shall be continued unaltered by any change of province, diocese, archdeaconry, or other jurisdiction whatsoever under the authority of the first-recited act as it was before the passing of the hereinbefore recited act.

5. That all authorities, save and except the authority of the bishop of whose diocese any portion has been or may hereafter be taken away and added to another diocese under the provisions of the hereinbefore recited act, shall continue to grant marriage licences in the same manner and within the same district as they might have done before the passing of the said act; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere with the jurisdiction or concurrent jurisdiction, as the case may be, of the bishops of the several dioceses in England to grant marriage licences in and throughout the whole of their dioceses, as such are now or hereafter may be limited or constituted.

6. That the temporary provisions of the hereinbefore recited act which by an act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to suspend, until the 31st December, 1847, the Operation of the new Arrangement of Dioceses, so far as it affects the existing Ecclesiastical Jurisdictions, and for obtaining returns from and the Inspection of the Registries of Jurisdictions," now stand continued until the 31st December next, shall continue in force until the 2nd November in this year, and shall then cease to be in force.

7. That so much of this act as is hereinbefore contained shall commence and come into force on the 1st November, 1847, and shall continue until the 1st August, 1848, and, if Parliament be then sitting, until the end of the then session of Parliament.

8. That where under the provisions of the first-recited act any parish or place shall have been brought within any diocese to which it did not belong before the passing of the first-recited act, and any act of jurisdiction or authority shall have been exercised as to such parish or place since the passing of the first-recited act, and before the 1st November in this year, by the bishop or any officer of the bishop of the diocese or any archdeacon of the diocese to which such parish or place belonged, either before or since the passing of the first-recited act, which does not conflict with any similar act of jurisdiction or authority previously and since the passing of the first-recited act exercised as to such parish or place by any other bishop or officer of any other bishop or archdeacon having or claiming to have jurisdiction as to such parish or place, the same shall be deemed as good and valid as if such parish or place had then been wholly and undoubtedly within the diocese and jurisdiction of the bishop by whom, or by any officer of whom, such act of jurisdiction or authority shall have been exercised.

9. That every person who shall have been appointed after the passing of the first-recited act, except as therein excepted, or who shall be appointed after the passing of this act, to the office of judge, registrar, or other officer of any ecclesiastical court in England, shall hold the same subject to all regulations and alterations affecting the same which may hereafter be made by authority of Parliament; nor shall any person by his appointment to any such office acquire any claim or title to compensation in case the same be hereafter altered or abolished by act of Parliament.

10. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. XCIX.

An Act to authorize a further Advance of Money for the Relief of destitute Persons in Ireland. [22nd July, 1847.]

3. Laws and Orders to apply to Vice-Chancellor so sitting.

4. Jurisdiction of Courts of Bankruptcy under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, transferred to Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors and to the County Courts. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

5. In Insolvent Debtors Court the Provisional Assignee, and in County Courts the Clerk to act as Official Assignee. Clerks of County Courts to act as Registrars. Bailiffs of County Courts to act as Messengers.

6. Jurisdiction of Insolvent Debtors Court and County Courts.

7. Recited Acts to apply to Persons petitioning who have been in Prison.

8. If Insolvent shall not have resided six Months, Jurisdiction vested in Insolvent Court or County Court.

9. Petitions now pending under recited Acts, &c. to be disposed of notwithstanding the Passing of this Act.

10. Jurisdiction of the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors on Circuit transferred to County Courts.

11. Recognisances of Sureties entered into under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, for enforcing Attendance of Insolvents to bind Persons to appear before County Courts.

12. Fees in Insolvent Debtors Court to go in Reduction of certain Compensations to its Officers.

13. Power to Secretary of State to order what Fees are to be paid to Officers under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and this Act. Until such Order made Clerks and Bailiffs to receive all Fees as heretofore.

14. Lord Chancellor may give Directions for Sittings of Court of Bankruptcy elsewhere than in London.

15. Lord Chancellor may order Payment of travelling and other Expenses.

16. Forms may be altered.

18. Judges of County Courts incapable of being Members of Parliament.

19. Interpretation of " Lord Chancellor."

20. Commencement of this Act.

21. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas it is expedient to abolish the Court of Review in Bankruptcy, and to make alterations in the jurisdiction of the Courts of Bankruptcy and Court for relief of Insolvent Debtors; be it therefore enacted, &c., That the Court of Review in Bankruptcy and the offices of the chief judge and other judges of the Court of Bankruptcy be hereby abolished.

2. That all the jurisdiction, powers, authorities, and privileges of the said Court of Review in Bankruptcy hereby abolished shall be transferred to and vested in and shall hereafter be exercised and enjoyed by such one of the Vice-Chancellors of the High Court of Chancery as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time be pleased to appoint, and that all persons now holding office or acting in the said Court of Review shall continue to hold the same, and to perform the duties thereof under the jurisdiction hereby created, in the same manner and under the same tenure and subject to the same regulations as they now hold the same and act therein; Provided always, that notwithstanding the passing of this act the present judges of the Court of Review shall be entitled to the same rank and precedence to which they are now entitled.

3. That all laws, orders, and authorities touching the practice and manner of proceeding in the said Court of Review, and appealing to and from the said court, shall continue in force, and be applicable to the jurisdiction of the said Vice-Chancellor so appointed; and that all sums and fees shall continue to be payable and receivable by the like persons, and shall continue to be paid and applied to the like purposes, as the same have heretofore been paid and received in respect of any matter in the said Court of Review.

4. That from the time this act shall commence and take effect all power, jurisdiction, and authority given to her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy and District Courts of Bankruptcy, and to the commissioners thereof, in matters of insolvency, by an act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 116,] intitled "An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors," and by an act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 96,] intitled "An Act to amend the Law of Insolvency, Bankruptcy, and Execution," and by an act passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. [c. 127,] intitled "An Act for better securing the Payment of Small Debts," or by the rules and orders made in pursuance of any of the said acts, shall be transferred to and vested in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England, and to and in the commissioners thereof for the time being, and to and in the county courts constituted or to be constituted under an act passed in the 9 & 10 Vict. [c. 95,] intitled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England," in manner hereinafter mentioned.

5. That in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors the provisional assignee, and in the said county courts the clerk of the court, shall in every case of insolvency under such two first-mentioned acts be and act as the official assignee of the estate and effects of the insolvent; and that in each of the said county courts the clerk of such court shall act as the registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy have heretofore been accustomed to act under any of the said acts; and every such clerk shall do and perform all acts heretofore done and performed by such registrars or by the clerk of the Insolvent Debtors Court under any of the said acts; and every such clerk shall do and perform all such acts and duties necessary for carrying this act into effect as shall be ordered by any such county court, or by any commissioner of the said court for the relief of insolvent debtors; and that the high bailiff of every such county court and his assistants shall be and act as a messenger of the Court of Bankruptcy and his assistants have hitherto been accustomed to act under the said acts; and such high bailiff and his assistants shall do all acts heretofore done under the said acts, and shall possess and enjoy all the powers, authorities, and privileges when acting under the said acts as have been heretofore done, possessed, or enjoyed by any messenger of the Court of Bankruptcy or his assistants when acting under any of the said acts, and shall do and perform all such acts as shall be ordered by any such county court for the purpose of carrying this act into effect.

6. That from the time this act shall commence and take effect the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England, and the commissioners thereof, and the judges of the county courts aforesaid, shall have jurisdiction in all matters of insolvency and debt under the aforesaid acts in manner following; that is to say, the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and the commissioners thereof, in all cases in which the insolvent in cases of insolvency, or the defendant in the case of any summons issued under the aforesaid act for the better securing the payment of small debts, shall have resided for six calendar months next immediately preceding the time of filing his petition, or of the suing out of any such summons aforesaid within any parish the distance whereof, as measured by the nearest highway from the General Post-office in London to the parish church of such parish, shall not exceed the distance of twenty miles, to which district the jurisdiction of the said court and the commissioners thereof under the aforesaid acts is hereby restricted; and the said county courts aforesaid in all cases wherein the insolvent or defendant shall have resided elsewhere, and shall have resided for six calendar months next immediately preceding the time of filing his petition, or the suing out of any summons within the district of such county court to which such insolvent shall prefer his petition, or to which any plaintiff may apply for any summons as aforesaid; and that every commissioner of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and every such county court aforesaid, shall, from and after the time this act shall commence and take effect, have and exercise, in the prosecution of such petitions and summonses filed and issued in such courts respectively, the like power and authority in all respects under the aforesaid acts as the commissioners of her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy and District Courts of Bankruptcy have heretofore had and exercised on the presentation of petitions of insolvent debtors, and on such summonses as aforesaid, under such acts, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, and shall each, singly, be and form a court for every purpose under this or the aforesaid acts; and that every commissioner of the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors shall henceforth, singly, be and form a court for every purpose under all acts now in force or which may hereafter be in force relating to insolvent debtors.

7. That the said two first-mentioned acts shall apply to the cases of persons petitioning under the said acts, although they may have been already in prison under judgment or otherwise for debt.

8. Provided always, and be it enacted, that if any such insolvent shall not have so resided for six months in any one place as aforesaid, then he shall file his petition in the said Insolvent Debtors Court, and the jurisdiction aforesaid in the matter of such insolvency shall be vested either in the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors in London, or in such one of the said county courts as the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors shall direct.

9. That with respect to petitions under the aforesaid acts or either of them which are now in dependence, or which shall have been presented to the Court of Bankruptcy or any District Court of Bankruptcy before the time at which this act shall commence and take effect, the provisions of such acts, and the jurisdiction of such courts and the commissioners thereunder such acts, or under the rules and orders made in pursuance thereof, shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding the passing of this act.

10. That from and after the 15th day of September next the circuits of the commissioners of the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors shall be abolished; and that if thereafter any insolvent debtor in custody in any of her Majesty's gaols situated elsewhere than within the district to which the jurisdiction of such court is restricted as hereinbefore mentioned shall petition such court under any act or acts relating to insolvent debtors, other than the two first-mentioned acts or this act, or if any such prisoner shall have so petitioned prior to the passing of this act, and his petition shall not have been heard, or if the same shall have been heard and the consideration thereof shall have been adjourned, such court or some commissioner thereof shall forthwith, after the schedule of such prisoner shall have been duly filed in the case of any new petition, and at any time which to such court or commissioner shall seem fit in the case of any petition which shall not have come on for hearing, or the hearing of which shall have been adjourned as aforesaid, make an order referring such petition for hearing to the county court within the district of which such insolvent debtor is in custody, and shall transmit such petition and schedule to such court for hearing accordingly; and that the judge of such court shall appoint a time and place for such prisoner to be brought up before such court, and cause the usual notices to be given; and that any court to which any such petition shall be so referred and transmitted shall have and possess the same power and authority with respect to every such petition, and shall make all such orders, give all such directions, and do all such matters and things requisite for the discharging or remanding of such prisoner, and otherwise respecting such prisoner, his schedule, creditors, and assignees, as the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors or any commissioner thereof might make, give, or do in the matters of petitions heard before such court or commissioner under such acts; and that every such petition and schedule, and all judgments, rules, orders, directions, and proceedings pronounced, made, and done thereon in all and every the matters aforesaid by such county court, shall be returned to the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, signed by the judge of such county court, to be a record of the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and to be kept as such among the records thereof; and the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and every commissioner thereof, in every case in which any insolvent debtor petitioning the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors under such acts shall be in custody in any of her Majesty's gaols within the district to which the jurisdiction of such court is limited aforesaid, and the county courts in the matter of every such petition so referred and transmitted for hearing as aforesaid, shall have power to issue a warrant or order, directed to the governor, keeper, or gaoler of any gaol, directing him to bring the insolvent before the county court on the day appointed for the hearing of his petition, or at any adjourned sitting held in the matter of this petition, and every such governor, keeper, or gaoler shall obey such warrant; and every such court may order the expense attending the bringing up of every such insolvent to be paid by the provisional assignee out of the estate and effects of such insolvent, or if there be no estate, or the same be insufficient for such purpose, out of the interest and profit arising from any government securities upon which any unclaimed money produced by the estates and effects of insolvent debtors may be invested.

11. And whereas in pursuance of an act passed in the second year of the reign of her Majesty [cap. 110], intitled "An Act for abolishing arrest on Mesne Process in Civil Actions except in certain Cases, for extending the Remedies of Creditors against the Property of Debtors, and for amending the Laws for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England," divers persons as sureties have entered into recognisances to the provisional assignee of the Insolvent Debtors Court, with conditions that the insolvents therein mentioned should duly appear at the times and places therein mentioned, and it is necessary that some of such insolvents should appear before the county courts under this act; be it therefore enacted, that every such recognisance shall extend to bind the persons who may have entered into the same, in case the insolvent debtor therein mentioned shall not at the time appointed in such recognisances duly appear before the county court to which the matter of such insolvent is transferred by this act and on every adjourned hearing, or shall not abide by the final judgment of such Court.

12. And whereas in consequence of late alterations in the laws of imprisonment for debt certain compensations have become payable and are paid by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to the officers of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in respect of the diminution of fees received therein: And whereas by the additional business given to the said court by this act the fees payable therein will again be increased, whereby a less sum will be required for the said compensations; be it enacted, that the fees to be received in the said court in matters where jurisdiction is given by this act shall be received by the same persons, to be by them applied in the same manner as the fees received in matters heretofore under the jurisdiction of the said court are now applied, anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, or any three of them, and they are hereby empowered, to give such directions as they shall think proper in regard to the compensation allowances now payable to the officers and clerks of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England, under the provisions of the said recited act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty, in consequence of the fees to be received by them being again increased by the operation of this act.

13. That it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, from time to time to order what fees shall be paid and received by the several officers or otherwise under and by virtue of the said recited act passed in the tenth year of the reign of her Majesty and of this act, and the amount of such fees respectively; and that until such order shall be made the clerks of the several county courts shall have and receive for their own use all fees which have heretofore been taken under any of the aforesaid acts by any officer of the Court of Bankruptcy, or by any officer or other person of or connected with the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, except as hereinafter mentioned, for business which is by this act transferred to the county courts; and that the several high bailiffs acting as messengers under this act as aforesaid shall have and receive for their own use all fees which have heretofore been paid to the messengers of the Court of Bankruptcy when doing the business by this act directed to be done by such bailiffs.

14. And whereas it may be expedient that the Court of Bankruptcy in London should hold sittings in matters of bankruptcy at some place or places within the district over which the jurisdiction of such court extends, at which such court hath not hitherto been used to sit; be it declared and enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, at any time or times whenever it shall appear to him to be expedient, by any order or orders to give the necessary directions in that behalf, ordering any commissioner, registrar, official assignee, messenger, or usher of the Court of Bankruptcy in London to sit and attend and act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy at any place elsewhere within such district than in the city of London; and every commissioner, registrar, official assignee, messenger, and usher so sitting, attending, and acting shall have the like power, jurisdiction, and authority as if sitting, attending, and acting in the prosecution of such fiat in London.

15. That any commissioner or registrar so sitting and acting shall have paid to him, in addition to his salary, by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor to be made from time to time for that purpose, out of the interest and dividends that have arisen or may arise from the securities now or hereafter to be placed in the Bank of England to an account there, entitled "The Bankruptcy Fund Account," (but subject and without prejudice to any prior charges on the same), such sum of money for travelling and other expenses as the Lord Chancellor shall deem fit.

16. That the forms given in the schedules of any of the said acts, or any forms heretofore used under the said acts, may be altered so far as to adapt them to the change of jurisdiction by this act directed.

17. That the office of the first one of the commissioners of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and of the first two of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy in London, which shall become vacant after the passing of this act, shall not be filled up until after the termination of the session of Parliament next after such vacancies shall have occurred.

18. That no judge of any county court who has been appointed or who shall hereafter be appointed to that office under or by virtue of the hereinbefore recited act passed in the tenth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England," shall, during his continuance in such office, be capable of being elected or of sitting as a member of the House of Commons.

19. That the words "Lord Chancellor" shall in the construction of this act be interpreted to mean also and include the Lord Keeper and Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the time being.

20. That this act shall commence and take effect from the 15th September, 1847.

21. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

An Act to amend the Passengers' Act, and to make further Provision for the Carriage of Passengers by Sea.

CAP. CIV.

An Act to explain the Acts for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales, and to continue the Officers appointed under the said Acts until the 1st day of October, 1850, and to the End of the then next Session of Parliament.

[22nd July, 1847.]

Sec. 1. So much of recited Acts as limits the Duration of Tithes Commission repealed. Powers of Commissioners, &c. to continue in force till Oct. 1, 1850, unless sooner determined.

2. Confirmed Apportionments to stand good.

3. Instruments of Apportionment may be corrected if any Lands shall have been improperly included or charged with Rent-charge therein.

4. Instruments to be delivered up for the Purpose of such Correction.

5. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 71], intituled "An Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales, tithes commissioners for England and Wales were appointed, and by the said act, and by sundry acts since passed for the amendment thereof, and for continuance of the said commission, the powers of the said commissioners now stand limited, and will expire at the end of the session of Parliament next after the 31st day of July in this year 1847; and it is expedient that the same be further continued: be it enacted &c., that so much of any of the recited acts as limits the time during which any tithes commissioner, assistant commissioner, secretary, or assistant secretary, or other officer or person appointed or to be appointed under the first-recited act, shall hold his office to the said 31st day of July, shall be repealed; and that the commissioners and assistant commissioners, secretary, assistant secretary, and other officers and persons appointed or to be appointed under the first-recited act, may continue to hold their several offices, if not sooner removed by lawful authority, until the 1st day of October in the year 1850, and until the end of the then next session of Parliament; and that all the powers of the said commissioners and their assistant commissioners, secretary, assistant secretary, officers, and servants for the time being, shall continue in force, according to the provisions of the said several acts as amended by this act, until the said 1st day of October, and the end of the then next session of Parliament, unless her Majesty shall be pleased sooner to determine the said commission.

2. And whereas by the first-recited act it was enacted, for the quieting of tithes, that no confirmed agreement, award, or apportionment shall be impeached after the confirmation thereof by reason of any mistake or informality therein, or in any proceeding relating thereunto, and doubts have been entertained as to the full meaning and extent of such enactment; be it declared and enacted, that, notwithstanding any exception in the said act contained, every instrument purporting to be an instrument of apportionment, confirmed under the hands and seal of the said tithe commissioners, shall be hereby absolutely confirmed and made valid, both at law and in equity, in all respects, subject nevertheless to the powers given to the tithe commissioners in the first-recited act, or in any act passed for the amendment thereof, for alteration of any instrument of apportionment.

3. Provided always, and be it enacted, that if it shall be shewn to the satisfaction of the said tithe commissioners that any lands have been improperly included or improperly charged with rent-charge in any confirmed instrument of apportionment, it shall be lawful for the said tithe commissioners to correct such apportionment, and the deposited copies thereof, either by excluding such lands so improperly charged from the apportionment, and re-distributing any rent-charge imposed upon such lands on lands legally liable to the payment thereof, or by sanctioning the redemption of the rent-charge so improperly charged by the persons capable of redeeming the same under the provisions of an act of the last session of Parliament, [9 & 10 Vict. c. 73], intituled "An Act further to amend the Acts for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales;" and all costs and expenses attendant upon the correction of any confirmed instrument of apportionment shall be borne and paid by such persons and in such proportions as the said tithe commissioners shall direct, and shall be recoverable from the person or persons declared liable by the said tithe commissioners to the payment of the same in such manner as expenses attendant upon original instruments of apportionment are recoverable.

4. That, for the purposes of such correction or of recording any such redemption, the person or persons having the custody of any copy of any instrument of apportionment shall be bound, upon the application of the tithe commissioners, to deliver to the said tithe commissioners any copy of a confirmed instrument of apportionment which shall have been deposited with them respectively.

5. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

Sect. 1. Expenditure incurred by any Parish, &c. for Maintenance, &c. of Persons who are or may be by the above recited Enactment exempted from Liability, to be charged to the Union.

2. Continuance of Act.

3. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas by an act passed in the last session of Parliament, [9 & 10 Vict. c. 66], intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Removal of the Poor," it was, amongst other things, enacted as follows: "that from and after the passing of this act no person shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for the removal of any person, from any parish in which such person shall have resided for five years next before the application for the warrant; provided always, that the time during which such person shall be a prisoner in a prison, or shall be serving her Majesty as a soldier, marine, or sailor, or reside as an in-pensioner in Greenwich or Chelsea Hospitals, or shall be confined in a lunatic asylum or house duly licensed or hospital registered for the reception of lunatics, or as a patient in a hospital, or during which any such person shall receive relief from any parish, or shall be wholly or in part maintained by any rate or subscription raised in a parish in which such person does not reside, not being a bona fide charitable gift, shall for all purposes be excluded in the computation of time hereinbefore mentioned, and that the removal of a pauper lunatic to a lunatic asylum under the provisions of any act relating to the maintenance and care of pauper lunatics shall not be deemed a removal within the meaning of this act; provided always, that, whenever any person shall have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be removable when he or she is removable, and shall not be removable when he or she is not removable." And whereas the effect of the above-recited enactment has been to increase unduly the amount of expenditure for the relief of the poor in particular parishes: be it therefore enacted &c., that all the expenditure which shall be incurred by any parish, township, or place forming part of a union for the maintenance, relief, or burial of any person or persons who shall have been at any time within one year before the passing of the above-recited enactment in the receipt of relief from some other parish, township, or place, by right of settlement or reputed settlement therein, and who by the above-recited enactment are or may be exempted from the liability to be removed from the parish, township, or place in which such person or persons shall be residing, shall from and after the passing of this act, so long as such person or persons shall continue to be so exempted, be charged to the common or general fund of such union in the same manner as the cost of building or providing workhouses in unions and other union expenses are directed to be charged by an act passed in the 4 & 5 WILL. 4, [c. 76], intitled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales."

2. That this act shall continue in force until the 1st day of October in the year 1849.

3. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

CAP. CXL.

An Act to extend the Provisions of the Act for the Inclosure and Improvement of Commons. [23rd July, 1847.]

2. Provision for the case of more than one person claiming to be interested.

3. Saving rights of the Crown and others to the soil of encroachments.

4. Exchanges may be made of land, excepting or reserving minerals and easements.

5. Recital of provision as to commissioners not proceeding to amend any award under any local act, &c. until notice of application shall have been given by advertisement, &c. Repealed provision repealed, and if the commissioners think fit to proceed on any application, they may refer the same to an assistant commissioner, &c.

6. Lands taken in exchange, &c. in respect of copyhold or customary lands, shall be held to be copyhold, and shall be held of the same lord, &c.

7. Meetings may be adjourned without the attendance of commissioner or assistant commissioner.

8. Notices may be given by the secretary of the commissioners, or other person appointed for that purpose.

9. Recited act deemed part of this act.

10. Act may be amended, &c.

Also, the Responsibility and Indemnity of convicting Magistrates and their Officers. With an Appendix of Practical Forms and Precedents of Convictions. Third Edition. By R. E. DEACON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE, and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and expounding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Notes.

This day is published, in 1 thick Vol. 8vo., price 11. 5s. boards, THE LAW relating to RAILWAYS and RAILWAY COMPANIES; with all the Cases relating to Compensation, Mandamus, Injunction, and other Matters decided in the Courts of Law and Equity; including the Decisions as to the Liability of Promoters and Provisional Committee-men, and on the Rateability of Railways to the Poor's Rate. Also the Practice in Parliament, Standing Orders, &c. The Appendix contains all the Statutes, Forms of Notices, Warrants, Injunctions, Awards, &c.; with Precedents of Pleadings, Deeds, &c. By WILLIAM HODGES, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, Recorder of Poole.

PRINCIPLES of the LAW of REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A work with which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupillage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 560, 768.

"The treatise which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkin's Treatise on Descents, published in 1831) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that, in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 11, 1847.

THERE may be many things in the practice of our English criminal law which require reform. But it should be a comforting reflection, to those who are dissatisfied with the criminal laws of their own country, that they are, at least, free from a practice which still disgraces the procedure of the most enlightened foreign countries, and which we should have hoped to see, ere this, expelled from the judicial practice of any nation affecting to be even moderately civilised: we allude to the practice of what certainly is, and we believe is technically called, "moral torture." It is not often that Englishmen have their attention particularly called to the judicial proceedings of the French authorities in the matter of persons accused of crimes; and, therefore, few, perhaps, are aware, and still fewer give much thought to the mode of proceeding adopted. But the late frightful occurrences which have taken place in the French capital, have caused us to be supplied with very minute information upon all the proceedings that have taken place, in the investigation of a death unquestionably the result of violence, but of which the author or authors cannot be said, at present, to be clearly identified. The point to which we particularly wish to direct our comments is, the examination of the Duke de Praslin,—an examination which, as it was conducted by the highest law officers of the State, must be presumed to have been strictly regular. But what a picture does it present of the French procedure in matters of criminal inquiry! Repeatedly was the Duke, a person, be it remembered, against whom there was nothing but circumstantial evidence, and that even not very strong at the time the examination was commenced, attacked and pressed with questions which could only be put on the assumption that he was guilty. After several answers to leading questions, the answers implying, at least, if not actually asserting the innocence of the person questioned, the President of the Court of Peers suddenly puts to the accused this question:—"Was she (the deceased) not stretched upon the floor where you had struck her for the last time?" Well might the prisoner reply:—"Why do you ask me such a question?" Then follow these questions and answers:—

"You must have experienced a most distressing moment when you saw, upon entering your chamber, that you were covered with the blood which you had just shed, and which you were obliged to wash off?—Those marks of blood have been altogether misinterpreted. I did not wish to appear before my children with the blood of their mother upon me.

"You are very wretched to have committed this crime?—(The accused makes no answer, but appears absorbed).

"Have you not received bad advice, which impelled you to this crime?—I have received no advice. People do not give advice on such a subject.

"Are you not devoured with remorse, and would it not be a sort of solace to you to have told the truth?—Strength completely fails me to-day.

"You are constantly talking of your weakness. I have just now asked you to answer me simply, 'yes,' or 'no?'—If any body would feel my pulse, he might judge of my weakness.

"Yet you have had just now sufficient strength to answer a great many questions in detail. You have not wanted strength for that?—(The accused makes no reply).

"Your silence answers for you that you are guilty?—You have come here with a conviction that I am guilty, and I cannot change it.

"You can change it if you give us any reason to believe the contrary; if you will give any explanation of appearances that are inexplicable upon any other supposition than that of your guilt?—I do not believe I can change that conviction on your mind.

“Why do you believe that you cannot change that conviction?—(The accused, after a short silence, said that he had not strength to continue).”

“When you committed this frightful crime did you think of your children?—As to the crime, I have not committed it; as to my children, they are the subject of my constant thoughts.

“Do you venture to affirm that you have not committed this crime?—(The accused, putting his head between his hands, remained silent for some moments, and then said) I cannot answer such a question.”

For a parallel to such an examination as this in English records, we must go back to the worst State prosecutions, in the worst of times. Even in our commonest police proceedings, when the crime with which a prisoner is charged is of such a character as to draw after it, if proved, perhaps only short imprisonment, how continually do we see the prisoner cautioned by his law adviser to be silent, and how rarely do we find any questions put to him; how much more rarely do we find him pressed, squeezed, tortured as it were, by such a pertinacious and oppressive string of interrogatories as that which has been administered by the highest French court to a man charged with a crime so horrible, that, if he was innocent, the shock produced on his mind and nerves by the circumstances attending the deceased's murder, and the fixing of the accusation upon himself, might well put him in a state in which he would be most unfit to contend against questions founded on a rooted impression of his guilt, and crowded upon him with the manifest object of driving him to a confession.

Nothing would be more possible than that an innocent man, subjected to the pressure of such a torture, might, purposely, in order to escape from it, or involuntarily, from pre-occupation of mind, make admissions which would so entangle him, as to render it almost impossible that he should, by any subsequent defence, remove the impression of his guilt. We are not intending to say that this was the fact in the case of the Duke de Praslin. There is certainly not much room for doubting that he was justly charged with the murder of the Duchess, either as perpetrator or director of it; nevertheless, there are circumstances which do raise some doubt, whether his hands committed it, particularly the fact that there were no less than eleven wounds on the head of the deceased, four of which (as it is stated), from their shape and appearance, must have been inflicted with some sharp instrument. Now, it is not very consistent, with probability, that a strong man, armed with any sharp weapon, or even any hard weapon, should have to inflict eleven wounds on a woman's head, before he succeeded in killing her. Again, many of the circumstances which appear to have been thought strong against the Duke, are not, we submit, if carefully considered, of much weight. For instance, considerable importance appears to have been attributed to the existence of scratches and wounds on the Duke's person, and to his being found possessed of a piece of cord so peculiarly arranged as to be at least adapted if not intended for strangling a person. As to the first point, it will be recollected that the Duke is described as having been found dressed immediately after the murder. Now, if he committed the murder, being dressed; there could hardly be scratches and lacerations as described, through his dress, upon his skin; and if he committed the murder, being dressed only in a night dress or in a dressing gown, it is singular that no traces of such dress, or of blood to any extent, trailed by it over the floor or furniture of the Duke's own room, should be found: according to the published evidence, none was found. The circumstance of the cord is not calculated to raise any suspicion at all, as connected with the actual murder. If it raises any suspicion, it would be that the Duke intended to strangle his wife, not that he meant to cut her to pieces. The presence of the pistol, the fact of there having been apparently a discharge of it, might be consistent with a defence by the Duke, of his wife, against another person.

We do not make these observations with the view of proving that the Duke de Praslin was innocent, but with the view of shewing that much of the circumstantial evidence apparently against him might, by possibility, be consistent with his innocence; that a man surrounded by such adverse circumstances might, by possibility, be so stunned and overwhelmed as to give himself up for lost; and might, therefore, be in a condition of mind to make the application of interrogatories such as those, which it seems French magistrates may and do administer to accused persons, an instrument not only of profound torture, but, possibly, of gross injustice.

Again, therefore, we say, we rejoice that, barbarian Saxons as we are, we are at least free from the judicial barbarism of applying to accused persons a species of torture, for which there is less excuse in the middle of the nineteenth century, than there was for racks and iron boots and thumbscrews in the middle ages.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 18, 1847.

THE doctrine now generally acted upon in regard to purchases of an equity of redemption, of technically maintaining or declaring the existence of the mortgage debt as a charge, after it is paid, is so contrary to common sense, that it would be most desirable to bring it within the range of the next set of legislative inquiries into legal reform. We say legislative inquiries, because we conceive the doctrine is now so far settled as to leave little probability of its being disturbed by the Courts. Indeed, absurd as it is in theory, it is beneficial, and, perhaps, absolutely necessary, for the protection of purchasers in practice; and, therefore, what is desirable is, that the effect which is now attained by an absurd method, should be attained by some positive rule consistent with sense.

A laudable attempt has been made by the learned Editor of the Third Edition of Mr. Bythewood's Precedents, (Vol. 9, p. 209, et seq., n. a), to place the doctrine on something like a rational ground, by contending that it can only be explained upon the principle that a purchaser of an equity of redemption is bound to indemnify the mortgagor from all liability under the mortgage, and that the relation of the vendor and purchaser in such cases is that of principal and surety. "The doctrine," he says, "established by the above decisions, has been disapproved of; (see 3 Sugd. Vend. 138); and some of the cases might, perhaps, have been otherwise determined. The only principle upon which they can be understood to have proceeded appears to be founded on the well settled rules, that a foreclosure is a purchase of the estate in consideration and satisfaction of the debt; (Perry v. Barker, 8 Ves. 527; 13 Id.); and that a purchaser of an equity of redemption is bound to indemnify the mortgagor from all liability under the mortgage. As to all charges, then, of which the purchaser had notice, the relation between him and the vendor is that of principal and surety. To allow, therefore, the purchaser, by resorting to the securities which as between himself and his vendor he has extinguished, to throw upon the vendor that burthen which he is impliedly bound to exonerate him from, would be contrary to all the principles of equity; and, on this ground, the decision in Brown v. Stead and Smith v. Phillips, at least, may be satisfactorily rested; and Parry v. Wright, though a harder case, could not, perhaps, have been differently decided. A vendor ought not to be allowed this equity, unless he has himself acted with good faith, and, therefore, although as between adverse incumbrancers constructive notice is deemed equivalent to actual knowledge, it may well be doubted whether the vendor, who is bound to give direct notice to the purchaser, and who has neglected to perform that duty, should be heard to insist, as in Toulmin v. Steere, on that fictitious notice, which was invented only for the protection of innocent parties."

However, the same learned writer proceeds to admit, that all the cases were founded on the general principle of merger; and no doubt the whole doctrine is founded upon that principle. Nor do we find fault with the application of the principle of merger, so far as it goes to establish, that when a mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption, or a purchaser of the equity of redemption pays off the mortgage debt, the debt is merged in the inheritance, and cannot be set up as a charge to override subsequent incumbrances, of which the purchaser has notice. For it is both law and sense that a man cannot separate his existence as an individual, from his existence as an owner of the inheritance, and say, that, in his personal character, he is indebted to himself in his territorial character; that he cannot, in fact, be at once debtor and creditor.

But that with which we quarrel, as an absurdity, is the notion, that, by transferring the satisfied debt to a trustee for the purchaser, he can, in fact, maintain the existence of the debt as a charge, so as to fall back upon it, in order to oust subsequent incumbrances. The true principle of the debt merging when a mortgagee purchases the equity of redemption, or the purchaser of an equity of redemption pays off the debt, is, that the debt is gone. Being paid, in the one case, or exchanged for its equivalent in the land in the other, (which is in a sense being paid), it has ceased to exist. It is technically said to be merged;—it is, in fact, at an end. How, then, can that which has ceased to exist be transferred, or, by purporting to be transferred, be kept in existence? One does understand the doctrine of assigning a satisfied term as a protection, (though that even grates a little upon one's common sense), because a term in land is a legal estate, whether the objects of the term be or be not satisfied. It would be, indeed, an estate, if there never had been any object to be satisfied. But a credit is not an estate, but only a claim, which, being satisfied, ceases, by the very act of its payment, to have any existence. So that the notion of keeping the debt on foot, as it is called, after it is, in fact, satisfied by payment, is simply one of those legal absurdities, to which we have been obliged to resort in order to get rid of the mischievous effects of certain other legal absurdities or refinements.

No doubt, it would be very unjust, and highly prejudicial to commerce, if no person could discharge a mortgage and take the equity of redemption, without letting in upon his estate all subsequent incumbrances, of which he had constructive, as well as those of which he had actual, notice. But the convenience of mankind would be quite as well met by a positive rule of law, that, in such cases, the purchaser's estate should not be rendered liable to such subsequent incumbrances by the destruction of the prior debt, as by the adoption of a contrivance, which we really believe no conveyancer ever has recourse to without an unwelcome sensation, that, while he draws, complete merger of his common sense in his law is taking place.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 25, 1847.

In our last Number we commented upon an absurdity in conveyancing law; we will now turn to an absurdity in the common law, the principle of which, when carried out to its remote, yet inevitable, consequences, produces something more savouring of atrocity, than of mere absurdity. We allude to the law regulating the right of a parent to bring an action for damages for the seduction of his daughter. The principle, if principle it can be called, of this law, bad and revolting as it is, does not always produce injustice. It may be, and no doubt is, very painful to the feelings of a parent, to be able to punish the seducer of his daughter, only through the circuitous mode of an action founded on an allegation, which, besides being in nine cases out of ten actually false, assumes, as the sole wrong done to the plaintiff, that which is merely a trifling, and most frequently unimportant, consequence of the wrong; and assumes, that the only value of his child, in the plaintiff's eyes, is her labour, as though she were his horse or his ox.

But, however revolting this may be, since juries are at liberty in actions of this nature to consider (upon what principle, is not at all intelligible) the wounded feelings of the plaintiff, under certain circumstances, justice, substantial though rough, is done, though done in a very clumsy way. But the principle of the right to sue being founded on a totally false assumption, must, of necessity, if correctly followed out and applied, produce, under certain circumstances, a total denial of justice. For herein is the difference between a law founded on a true and rational principle, and one that is founded on a false principle. The former may not always work full justice, owing to defective forms of proceeding, or the misapplication of it, caused by erroneous reasoning in deducing consequences from the rule; that is, it may not work all the good that it ought, or it may even sometimes be so employed as actually to work a wrong; but it does so not of its own nature or by force of its own qualities. On the contrary, where the principle of a law is false and vicious, it requires a given state of facts for its object, in order to be capable of avoiding wrong; it requires regulation and moulding, and in fact distortion, to be rendered capable of working justice, even under favourable circumstances; and when unfavourable circumstances are presented to its operation, then, the more sound and logical is the reasoning applied to deduce consequences from it, the more pernicious and unjust is its operation.

The case very lately decided of Davies v. Williams (11 Jur. 750) elucidates and confirms most completely this doctrine, and exposes, in the most marked manner, the cruelty as well as absurdity of our law of seduction. In that case the plaintiff's daughter had been in the service of the defendant, and had been seduced by him. She left his service in a state of pregnancy, and went to her mother and lived with her in a state of service till after the birth of a child. The mother brought her action in the usual form. It was held that she could not sue, because the trespass which caused the loss of service, was not committed while the relation of mistress and servant existed between the mother and daughter. That the case was rightly decided in point of law it would hardly be respectful to doubt, when one sees that it was decided by the whole Court unanimously, and after an elaborate argument; but besides, the reasoning on which it was decided is in itself plain and conclusive. The principle on which the right of action is grounded, being solely that the defendant has injured the plaintiff's servant, whereby plaintiff servitium amisit, and having no reference at all to the wrong done to the parent quâ parent; how could any ingenuity deduce from such a principle, that, because a person has injured a servant so that she is not able to work, and I take that servant, I can have an action against the person who has injured her? The defendant, in Davies v. Williams, clearly had never injured the plaintiff's servant; but the plaintiff chose to take into her service an incapable servant. It was as if she had bought a lame horse, and then had brought an action against the person who had antecedently injured the horse. Accurate reasoning being therefore employed in applying the rule to the circumstances in Davies v. Williams, necessarily produced a failure of justice. If the principle of the law had been that a parent is entitled simply as parent, to a remedy for the injury done to him by the seduction of his daughter, then, in such a case as Davies v. Williams, the circumstance which enabled the defendant altogether to elude punishment, viz. his having seduced the woman while he was her master, would in law, as it unquestionably would in morality, have been an aggravation of the injury. And instead of escaping wholly, he would probably have been punished, as he ought to have been, by heavier damages. As the law stands, he was in a better position, because he committed the injury for which he was sued, under circumstances aggravating his culpability. We are not, it will clearly be understood, quarrelling with the decision. It appears to us, that it was so right, that a different decision could not have been arrived at by men reasoning soundly from an established principle. But we quarrel with the continuance of a principle so false, that injustice is worked, not by misapplying it, but by the most careful and correct application of it. If seduction be no real injury; if the well-being and morality of society do not require it to be in any degree punished or repressed, let it be so declared; but if it be an injury at all, it is so as an injury to the sense of honour and to the happiness of the individual and of the parents, not as causing merely a suspension of the power of labouring; and the right to sue ought to be founded on that which really is the injury, not on that which may or may not be a consequence of the injury, and when it is, is rarely an injury in itself of any magnitude. Practically the law gives a remedy only to those who, perhaps, least require and deserve it; for, unquestionably, a certain degree of coarseness of mind and insensibility appear almost necessary ingredients in the willingness to become a plaintiff in an action where a parent seeks for damages, on the ground that his daughter has, by being seduced, been rendered less available to him as a hewer of wood and drawer of water.

ACTIONS, &c. BY ASSIGNEES OF REVERSIONS ON AGREEMENTS IN LEASES NOT UNDER SEAL.

In the case of Standen v. Chrismas, (11 Jur. 694), the Court of Queen's Bench decided that the stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, "concerning grantees of reversions to take advantage of the condition to be performed by the lessees," applies only to cases of demise by deed, and that, therefore, the assignee of the reversion on a lease not under seal could not sue in assumpsit on the lessee's contract to repair. That the statute of Hen. 8 is confined to leases by indenture is perfectly plain from its language, and had been already decided; (Buckworth v. Simpson, 5 Tyr. 364); but whether the assignee of a reversion cannot, independently of the statute, sue on a contract relating to the land entered into with his assignee, is a point which deserves more consideration than the Court of Queen's Bench seems to have bestowed on it, if, indeed, they considered it at all.

The stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, was passed soon after the dissolution of the monasteries, at a time when freehold leases were much more common than they now are, and appears to have been intended principally to remedy the inconveniences consequent upon the rule of law, that the assignee of a reversion cannot take advantage of a condition for forfeiture contained in a lease for life, according to the distinction taken by Coke: "If a man make a gift in tail or a lease for life upon condition that, if the lessee goeth not to Rome before such a day, the gift or lease shall cease or be void, the grantee of the reversion shall never take advantage of this condition, because the estate cannot cease before an entry; but if the lease had been but for years, then the grantee should have taken advantage of the like condition, because the lease for years, ipso facto, by the breach of the condition without any entry, was void; for a lease for years may begin without ceremony, and so may end without ceremony, but an estate of freehold cannot begin nor end without ceremony. And of a void thing an estranger may take benefit, but not of a voidable estate by entry." But the statute is not confined to the case of a condition for forfeiture. It recites the use of conditions, covenants, and agreements in leases under seals, and that "by the common law of this realm, no stranger to any covenant, action, or condition shall take any advantage or benefit of the same by any means or ways in the law, but only such as be parties or privies thereunto, by the reason whereof as well all grantees of reversions as also all grantees and patentees of the king, &c. be excluded to have any entry or action against the said lessees and grantees, their executors or assigns, which the lessors before that time might by the law have had against the same lessees for the breach of any condition, covenant, or agreement contained in the indentures of their said leases, demises, and grants;" and enacts, that all grantees of reversions which belonged to any of the suppressed monasteries, as also all other persons being grantees or assignees, and their heirs, executors, successors, and assigns, shall have the like entry for non-payment of rent, waste, or other forfeiture, and also the like remedies by action only, "in like manner and form as if the reversion of such lands, &c. had not come to the hands of our said sovereign lord, or as our said sovereign lord, his heirs and successors, should or might have had and enjoyed in certain cases, by virtue of the act made at the first session of the present parliament, if no such grants by letters patents had been made by his highness." The act then gives to lessees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, similar remedies against the assignees of reversion on the covenants entered into by the lessors, except covenants and clauses of warranty.

The inaccuracy of the enacting part of the statute is obvious, and the preamble appears to be not more precise. The general proposition contained in it, that grantees of reversions cannot sue on any covenants entered into with the lessors, was certainly not law, for it is settled that covenants relating to the lands, and entered into with the owner of it, may at common law be sued on by his assignee, whether the estate be a fee or a term of years, and whether it moved from the covenantor at the time of making his covenant or not. (Co. Litt. 384 b.; Middlemore v. Goodale, Vin. Abr., "Covenant," (K.) 6; Cro. Car. 603; Nob v. Awdler, Cro. El. 373, 486; Baker v. Damer, 3 Mod. 338; Show, 191; Athens v. Hamlyn, 1 Roll. Rep. 81; Campbell v. Lewis, 3 B. & Ald. 365; Kingdon v. Nottles, 4 M. & S. 53). As the application of the statute has been confined to covenants relating to the land, it is not easy to see what alteration it effected with respect to covenants. No one doubts that the assignee of a lease may sue the lessor on his covenants, and the statute of Hen. 8 expressly gives to lessors, their executors, administrators, and assigns, the same actions against assignees of the reversions, which they would have had against their lessors; but an action by an assignee of the lease against the lessor himself, is not within the act.

If, then, independently of the statute of Hen. 8, an assignee of a reversion may sue the lessee on a contract under seal relating to the land, (e. g. a covenant to repair), there seems to be no reason why the assignee of the reversion in Standen v. Christmas should not have been held entitled to sue the lessee on his contract to repair, though it was not under seal, for it nowhere appears that the transmissibility to an assignee of the benefit or obligation of a contract relating to the land depends on the solemnity of the instrument in which it is contained. As the right of the plaintiff to sue, independently of the statute, does not appear to have been suggested in that case, its authority on that point cannot be considered as conclusive. Covenants and contracts which the law implies have always been allowed to pass to assignees independently of the statute. In Standen v. Christmas there was a count upon a supposed implied promise to use the premises in a tenantlike and proper manner, but the Court held that there could be no such implied contract, as the tenant held under an express contract which provided for the very matter. It is at least singular that the plaintiff should have been deprived of the benefit of the tenant's liability to repair, simply because the parties did not take the precaution to say nothing about it.

A lease for more than three years cannot now be made without deed, and there is no advantage in any case in making a lease without deed, because the stamp is the same whether it is under seal or not. But leases do occasionally occur which are not made by indenture, and with regard to them it is important to inquire whether there is any foundation for Lord Coke's position, that the reversioner's assignee could not, at common law, take advantage of the power of re-entry. Littleton confines his statement of the rule to the cases of a lease for life, and the reason given by Coke in his Commentary (that, for avoiding of maintenance, &c. nothing of action, entry, or re-entry can be granted over) is not applicable to an entry in respect of a chattel interest. That a power of re-entry upon a freehold lease would not pass with the reversion, was consistent with the rule, that a freehold could not be made to commence or cease in futuro, and that a contingent freehold interest was not assignable: but a right of entry reserved in a demise for years, is, in fact, an interesse termini; and as the assignee of an interesse termini may enlarge his interest into an estate by entry, (Co. Litt. 46. b.; Bac. Abr., "Leases," (M.)), there seems to be no reason why the assignee of the reversion on a term of years may not take advantage of the right of entry which has been expressly granted to the reversioner. An indenture reviving the condition of a lease after a dispensation, is clearly not within the statute of Hen. 8, but it has never been considered that the benefit of such a defeasance would not pass to the assignee of the reversion.

If the above conclusions are correct, it seems to follow that an assignee of the reversion may take advantage of the agreements and conditions made upon a verbal letting from year to year, and if so that he may take advantage of the agreements and conditions contained in a memorandum of agreement, (not being a lease), containing the terms by which a yearly tenancy, either contemplated or already in existence, is to be regulated. For if the tenancy is actually in existence, the tenant may make a defeasance without deed, and may enter into contracts with the reversioner relating to the land, and if the tenancy is afterwards created in pursuance of the agreement, it will be in effect a parol lease, embodying by reference the terms of the pre-existing agreement.

S.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

The ordinary is bound to grant probate of an instrument which is indisputably the will of the deceased; and if the executor accepts the office and desires probate, and is refused by the ordinary, a writ will go from the temporal courts to compel him; (Luskins v. Carver, Style, 7; 1 Gibs. Cod. 468); for, although the Spiritual Court is to determine whether there be a will, the executor has a temporal right, and the ordinary cannot put him to any terms but those mentioned in the will; and, therefore, if he will not grant the probate where it is admitted that there is an executor, a mandamus lies to compel him. (1 Wms. Exors. 283, 3rd Edit.; Marrriot v. Marrriot, 1 Stra. 672; Anon., 1 Vent. 335; Anon., 1 Stra. 552; Dunkin v. Man, Sir T. Ray. 233; Offey v. Best, 1 Lev. 186; Re v. The Inhabitants of Horley, 8 East, 408; Reg. v. Raines, 3 Salk. 233).

And, in a case of complete intestacy, if the ordinary will not grant administration as the statutes appoint, a mandamus lies to compel him. (Anon., 2 Sid. 114; Offey v. Best, 1 Lev. 187; Anon., 1 Freem. 372). Thus, if he refuse to commit administration to the husband of the wife's effects, a mandamus will issue. (Re v. Betersworth, 2 Stra. 891, 1118). So a mandamus may be had to enforce the right of a sole next of kin; and this, notwithstanding a suit depending his consanguinity not being denied. (Re v. Hay, 1 W. Bl. 640; Re v. Hay, 4 Burr. 2295; Re v. Horsley, 8 East, 406). And, in a case where the widow applied for a mandamus to commit administration to her, although the Court refused it in that form, on the ground that it would deprive the ordinary of the election which the statute gives him between her and the next of kin; yet they issued the writ generally to grant administration of the goods of the intestate. (Anon., 1 Stra. 552, cited by Lawrence, J., in 8 East, 406; 1 Wms. Exors. 335, 336; and see Fawtry v. Fawtry, 1 Salk. 36; Bloxborough v. Davis, 1 Raym. 684; S. C. 1 Salk. 38; 3 Salk. 21).

And in a case where the bishop, as warden of Manchester College, refused to admit a chaplain, it was held a mandamus would lie, there being no visitor. (Re v. The Bishop of Chester, 2 Stra. 797). So, a mandamus lies to compel admission to a canonry or prebendary. (Clarke v. The Bishop of Sarum, 2 Stra. 1082). Also to the dean and chapter to fill up a vacancy among the canons residentiary. (Bishop of Chichester v. Howard, 1 T. R. 652; Re v. The Dean and Chapter of Norwich, 1 Stra. 159). So it lies to the trustees of a meeting-house to admit a dissenting teacher. (Re v. Barker, 3 Burr. 1265; S. C., 1 Bl. Rep. 300, 352). So it lies to restore a curate to a chapel who had been turned out. (Re v. Bloer, 2 Burr. 1043; see Re v. Barker and Others, ubi sup.). To compel the bishop to grant a license to a lecturer to preach, or to shew good cause to the contrary. (Re v. London, 13 East. 419; Re v. The Bishop of London, 1 Wils. 11, 15; see also Colefate v. Newcomb, 2 Ld. Raym. 1206). The Court said:—"There can be no question but this Court hath jurisdiction in all cases of this nature; but the question is, whether this be a proper case for the Court to exercise that jurisdiction. The foundation of applying to this Court in cases of this nature is, that the Statute of Uniformity, (13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 19), having made a license necessary, and vested that authority in the bishop, this Court will not suffer him to exercise that authority arbitrarily; but where a person appears to have a right, will compel the bishop to grant a license or shew good reason to the contrary. (Rez v. The Bishop of London, 1 Wils. 11; S. C., 13 East, 420; Rez v. Canterbury, 15 East, 117; and see The Churchwardens of St. Bartholomew, 3 Salk. 86; S. C., Holt's Rep. 418; 12 Mod. 433). To restore a parish clerk, which is a temporal office, and though appointed by the minister, if removed by him without a sufficient cause, a mandamus lies to restore him. (Rez v. Warren, Cowp. 370; Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.) 531; see also Tarrant v. Hasby, 1 Burr. 367; Peake v. Bowen, 2 Stra. 942; Pitts v. Evans, 2 Stra. 1108; Reg. v. Wale, 11 Mod. 261; Rez v. Ashton, Say. Rep. 159; Rez v. Procter, 15 Gow, 3, cited per Lord Mansfield in Rez v. Warren, Clerk; Rez v. Henchman, Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.)). So to appoint a parish clerk. (Rez v. The Rector of St. Ann's, Soho, 3 Burr. 1877; Anon., Lofft. 434). And where a parish clerk hath been unanimously chosen by the vestry, and after admitted and sworn before the archdeacon, and he refused to swear such parish clerk so elected, but admits another chosen by the parson, a mandamus lies to compel him to swear the clerk so elected by the vestry. (2 Rolls. Abr. 234; Vin., "Mandamus," (H.) 3; 3 Burn, Eccl. Law, 64). So a mandamus lies to restore to the office of sexton of the parish. (Rez v. The Churchwardens of St. James, Cowp. 413; Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.); Rez v. Morpeth, 1 Stra. 59; Rez v. Kingsclere, 2 Lev. 18; Il's case, 1 Ventr. 143, 153; Reg. v. Stoke Damerel, 5 Adol. & Ell. 589). So it lies to appoint a scavenger. (Il's case, ubi sup.). To admit churchwardens. (Rez v. Harris, 3 Burr. 1428; S. C., 1 Bl. Rep. 430; 2 Chit. Rep. 254). So it lies to the Ecclesiastical Court to swear two churchwardens elected by the parish. (Anon., Ventr. 115; Id. 267; 2 Robs. 106, 107; 3 Cro. 551, 589; Rez v. Rice, 1 Raym. 138; S. C., Carth. 393; 5 Mod. 325; Rez v. Rees, 12 Mod. 116; Churchwardens of Northampton's case, Carth. 118; Rez v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 609; S. C., 2 Ld. Raym. 1379; Rez v. Harwood, Ib. 1405). So it lies to restore a churchwarden, being a temporal officer, and an office concerning the public; and where to a mandamus to swear a churchwarden chosen according to custom, the archdeacon returned that the person presented was a poor dairyman who had no estate, the Court granted a peremptory mandamus. (Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.); see also 2 Roll. Abr. 234). So it lies for a register in an ecclesiastical court. (Comb. 133; Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.)). So it lies to the commissary of York to admit a deputy register of the Archbishop of York's Court. (Rez v. Ward, 2 Stra. 893; Rez v. Hill, 1 Show. 253; Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.); but see Rez v. The Bishop of Gloucester, 2 B. & Adol. 58). So to restore to the office of apparitor-general of the Archbishop of Canterbury. (Folke's case, cited in Rez v. Ward, ubi sup.)

We have already seen the Court will compel the ordinary to grant administration and probate in certain cases. Still, in some cases, the Courts have refused the application for a mandamus. Thus, where the father applied for administration to his son's goods, durante minori etate of his grandson, and the ordinary refused, on application for a mandamus, the Court would not grant the writ, saying, that as there was no law which directed to whom these administrations during minority should be granted, there was no law to put in execution; they could not, therefore, grant the writ. (Smith's case, 2 Stra. 892). And where the husband has done some act to deprive himself of all interest in the wife's fortune, as by settlement before marriage, the Court will not compel the ordinary to grant administration to him. (Rez v. Bettesworth, Stra. 1111; but see Rez v. Bettesworth, Id. 891). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to compel the Ecclesiastical Court to grant probate where a suit is pending. (Lovegrove v.

Bethel, 1 B. C. Rep. 668). The Court will not grant a mandamus to compel the ordinary to grant administration, unless the person applying has first had resort to the ecclesiastical judge and been refused. (Raine's case, 1 Ld. Raym. 262; S. C., 1 Salk. 299; Carth. 457).

Where a mandamus was applied for to elect a canon of the Cathedral Church of St. David's to fill the next vacancy; it being alleged that there was a custom that persons should be elected previous, in order to fill the next vacancy; the Court refused the mandamus. (Owen v. Straindow, Jones, 199). So, the Court refused a mandamus to restore the minister of an endowed dissenting meeting-house, when expelled by the majority of the congregation; it appearing that he had not complied with all the requisites essential to give him a prima facie title, Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "There is no doubt but that a mandamus lies in these cases where there is an endowment, if a proper case be made out. But it is necessary for a party applying for a mandamus to be restored to any office, to make out a prima facie title to such office, and shew, at least, that he has complied with all the forms necessary to constitute his right. Here it does not appear that the party applying has gone through all those ceremonies which the particular sect, of which he is a member, has made it necessary." (Rez v. Jotham, 3 T. R. 575). "If he had been before regularly admitted, he might try his right by bringing an action for money had and received for the profits." (Per Buller, J., Id. 578). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to elect to the office of canon residentiary and dean of a cathedral church, the right of election appearing to be in the chapter, and no right being shewn that the Crown possessed the right claimed by it, viz. that of recommending the party whom the chapter was bound to elect. (Reg. v. The President of St. Peter's, Exeter, 9 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 303). Nor will a mandamus be granted to a bishop to license a curate of an augmented curacy where there is a cross nomination, because the party had another specific remedy by quare impedit. (Rez v. The Bishop of Chester, 1 T. R. 396). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to the bishop to grant a license to a lecturer who has no fixed salary, but a voluntary contribution in lieu: there is no custom for a person to preach without the consent of the rector, for no person can use the pulpit of a rector unless he consent. (Rez v. The Lecturer of St. Ann's, Westminster, 2 Stra. 1192; Rez v. The Bishop of London, 1 T. R. 331; Rez v. The Bishop of Oxford, 7 East, 645; Id. 600; Rez v. The Bishop of Exeter, 2 East, 468; Rez v. Barker, 3 Burr. 1267, per Lord Mansfield). Nor will a mandamus lie to the rector to certify to the bishop the election of a lecturer, there being no immemorial custom for the lecturer to use the pulpit without the consent of the rector. (Rez v. Field and Others, 4 T. R. 125). Nor will a mandamus lie to commission delegates to admit the bishop's allegations in a suit instituted. (The Bishop of St. David's v. Lucy, 1 Ld. Raym. 544). Nor does a mandamus lie to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to issue his fiat to the Vicar-general of the province of Canterbury for the admission of a doctor of civil laws as an advocate of the Court of Arches. (Rez v. The Archbishop of Canterbury, 8 East, 213). And it has been held that no mandamus lies to restore a proctor of Doctors' Commons; because it is an ecclesiastical office, and a matter properly and only cognisable in that court, for the temporal courts are not to intermeddle or inquire into their sentence, or into the proceedings in any matters whereof they have a proper jurisdiction, but are to give credit hereto. (Rez v. Orenden, 1 Show. 217, 261; Rez v. Newton, Id. 251; S. C., nom. Leigh's case, 3 Mood. 332; Carth. 169; 3 Lev. 309; 1 Stra. 59, per Holt, J.; Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.)). Nor does a mandamus lie to restore a clerk of a dean and chapter, because it is not a public office. (Comb. 133; Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (C.)). Where the registrars of a diocese were authorised by their patent of office to appoint a deputy, to be "approved of and allowed by the bishop," who, if he should not approve of and allow the deputy named and proposed to him, was empowered to appoint another, and on the registrars appointing a deputy, and submitting him to the bishop for approbation, he answered, that "for good and sufficient reasons" he disapproved of the party nominated, but declined to specify his reasons, the Court refused a rule nisi for a mandamus to the bishop to admit the deputy. (Res v. The Bishop of Gloucester, 2 B. & Adol. 158). The Court will not grant a mandamus to a visitor, when it is doubtful whether such person is a visitor or not. (Res v. The Bishop of Ely, 1 Wils. 266; and see Usher's case, 5 Mod. 452; Com. Dig., "Mandamus," B.; see Res v. The Bishop of Lincoln, 2 T. R. 338, n., cited in Res v. The Bishop of Ely, where it is said, the Court will compel him to hear the parties and form some judgment, though they will not oblige him to go into the merits).

LONDON, OCTOBER 2, 1847.

THE subject of "thrown-away votes" is one of considerable importance, inasmuch as it affects the validity of parliamentary and corporate elections, and of all matters depending for their decision on a majority of voices. It has been recently discussed in the public journals, with reference to the election of Mr. Cowan, as member for Edinburgh, who was said to be a government contractor, and, therefore, ineligible; it has also been frequently debated before committees of the House of Commons, but the doctrine is nowhere more clearly stated than in the important case of Gosling v. Veley and Joslin, decided in the early part of the present year by the Court of Queen's Bench, (16 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 201; 11 Jur. 385). In that case a motion had issued from the ecclesiastical court, directing the parishioners of Baintree to make a rate for the repairs of the church. At a vestry meeting, held in pursuance thereof, a rate was duly proposed and seconded; the only objection raised was in the form of an amendment, to the effect, that, upon general principles, no church-rate should be imposed; and this amendment was carried by a majority. The churchwardens and the minority, however, proceeded then and there to make the rate. The Court held such rate to be valid, upon the ground that it was made by a legal, though not a numerical, majority, as the votes of the objectors were thrown away, the objection being wholly beside the purpose for which they had assembled, and all the circumstances connected with the rate being known to them. Lord Denman, in delivering the judgment of the Court, declared it to be a case in which the rule as to corporate and other elections was properly applicable, and thus stated that rule:—"Where the majority of electors vote for a disqualified person, in ignorance of the fact of disqualification, the election may be void or voidable. . . . . But in no such case are the electors who vote for him deprived of their votes; if the fact become known, and is declared while the election is still incomplete, they may instantly proceed to another nomination, and vote for another candidate; if it be disclosed afterwards, the party elected may be ousted, and the election declared void, but the candidate in the minority will not be deemed ipso facto elected. But where an elector before voting receives due notice that a particular candidate is disqualified, and yet will do nothing but tender his vote for him, he must be taken voluntarily to abstain from exercising his franchise; and, therefore, however strongly he may in fact dissent, and in however strong terms he may disclose his dissent, he must be taken in law to assent to the election of the opposing and qualified candidate, for he will not take the only course by which it can be resisted, that is, the helping to the election of some other person."

A vote, therefore, is thrown away where it is given for an object wholly foreign to the purpose for which it is required, there being a legal duty to vote, if at all, in relation to that purpose, or where it is given for a candidate after notice of his being ineligible. A question arises, whether, in the last-mentioned case, notoriety of disqualification is sufficient without express notice? Mr. Rogers, in his Work on Elections, (p. 227, 6th Edit.), seems to answer in the negative, on the ground that disqualifications, though notoriously existing before the poll, may have been got rid of at or even after its opening, and that it is the continuance of the disqualification which requires to be published, and not the fact of its having previously existed. This, however, implies that the disqualification is of a temporary, not of a perpetual character, and to such an extent, the reason holds good. Where the disqualification is perpetual, or of such a nature that notice must be presumed, the rule would probably be different, and the language of the Court in Geering v. Mellet would apply:—"Where the disqualification depends upon a fact which may be unknown to the elector, he is entitled to notice, for without that, the inference of assent could not be fairly drawn, nor would the consequence as to the vote be just. But if the disqualification be of a sort whereof notice is to be presumed, none need expressly be given. No one can doubt, that if an elector would nominate and vote only for a woman to fill the office of mayor or Burgess in Parliament, his vote would be thrown away; there the fact would be notorious, and every man would be presumed to know the law upon that fact." Such a notoriety and such a disqualification could occur, however, in very few instances.

In the case of Mr. Cowan's election, with reference to which, principally, these remarks have been offered, no express notice was given of his being a government contractor: it was clearly not a perpetual disqualification, nor was it one so notorious as to admit the presumption of notice. Assuming, therefore, his ineligibility, yet the votes given for him could not be said to be thrown away, in the sense which has been attached to that term, and, therefore, Mr. Macaulay, with a minority of votes, would not be seated. A new election would be necessary, unless the stat. 22 Geo. 3, c. 45, which disqualifies government contractors from serving in Parliament, has introduced an exception to the general rule.

The 1st section of that statute enacts, that any person, who shall directly or indirectly, himself, or by any one in trust for him, undertake any contract or commission with or from the commissioners of the Treasury, Navy or Victualling Office, Master-General or Board of Ordnance, or with any other persons for or on account of the public service, shall be incapable of being elected, or of sitting or voting as a member during the time he shall hold such contract. By the 9th section, if any such person shall be returned as a member, "such election and return shall be void." By the 3rd section, the act is not to affect incorporated trading companies, if they contract in their corporate capacity.

There would appear to be nothing in the terms of the act to take the case of a government contractor out of the general rule applicable to the election of disqualified persons. The election, in all such cases, is void or voidable, but the candidate in the minority will not be deemed ipso facto elected, unless notice of the disqualification has been expressly given, or may be presumed.

Sir John Bernard Bosanquet died at his residence, the Firs, Hampstead Heath, on the 26th inst., aged seventy-four. The deceased was the son of Samuel Bosanquet, Esq., of Forest House, Essex, and his career may be marked by the following dates:—In 1800, called to the bar; in 1824, made a Serjeant-at-law; and in 1827, a King's Serjeant. He was raised to the dignity of Judge in 1830, at which period he was knighted, and sworn in a Privy Councillor. In 1835 and 1836, when the vacant Chancellorship was executed by commission, he was appointed one of the commissioners.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE CAPACITY OF A PERSON PROFESSING THE JEWISH RELIGION TO SIT IN PARLIAMENT.

Much anxiety appears to prevail at the present time, partly, we presume, in reference to particular interests, but chiefly as a matter of principle, on the question, whether a person professing the Jewish religion can sit as a member of Parliament. The question is one on which it will, we apprehend, be impossible to find anything like direct authority, and it must be solved, if solved it can be without an act of Parliament, by reference to general principles, and to decisions upon the status and rights of persons of the Hebrew persuasion generally. It seems to be supposed that there is a technical impossibility in the way of a Jew sitting in Parliament, arising out of the language of the oath that a member must take before sitting. This, we believe, is a mistake. The only oaths which a member is required to take are the oaths of allegiance and supremacy. In these oaths the words "on the true faith of a Christian," which are in the form of oath prescribed by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, as to the qualification for offices, are not found; nor do we believe that there is anything in them to which a Jew might not conscientiously pledge his oath. All declarations of allegiance to the Sovereign, and of conviction that she is not to be controlled by any foreign prince or power; all declarations of hatred and contempt for the Pope of Rome, however childish they may be at this day, are declarations to which, we apprehend, a good Israelite may swear with as much unction and as much honesty as a Protestant Christian. Indeed, the best proof of this is, that the oaths to be taken by a barrister are the same as those to be taken by a member of Parliament, and that there are several gentlemen of the Jewish faith at the Bar. If, however, there were any oath which it is the practice to administer to a member of Parliament before he takes his seat, containing the words "on the faith of a Christian," or other words inconsistent with the religious belief of a Jew, it must be remembered, that, at least, the administration of such oaths is at the will and pleasure of the House, and not compulsory by any act of Parliament; so that whether the existence of any such practice would exclude a Jew from Parliament, is a matter resting in the breast of the House, and on which the House may lawfully enforce or relax its practice at its pleasure.

But there is a more difficult question behind all this mere form, and that is, whether upon principle a Jew is competent to sit in the House. We mean of course upon legal principle. Whether upon the principles of policy and religious toleration such a person ought to be able to represent his fellow citizens, is one on which of course men will differ, and as THE JURIST is not a political journal, we shall not offer any opinion or arguments on that subject. But, on legal principle, we conceive the question to be not free from grave difficulties.

There is, we believe, no instance of a professed Jew ever having sat in Parliament, and that, as our readers well know, is a legal reason why it is not lawful that he should, for custom interprets the law: and if a Jew might have sat in Parliament, it shall be intended that at some time it should have happened. "As usage," says Lord Coke, "is a good interpreter of laws, so non-usage, where there is no example, is a great intendment that the law will not bear it; for, saith Littleton, if any action might have been grounded upon such matter, it shall be intended that at some time it should have been put in use." (Co. Litt. 81. b.). But more, it is unquestionably a maxim that the Christian religion is part and parcel of the law of England; so much so, that a bequest for the express purpose of teaching the Jewish faith, would be void, (De Costa v. De Paz, 2 Swanst. 487, note), as being hostile to the Christian religion. Now, if such is the doctrine of the law, it would seem strange that a person of the religious persuasion so held, for some purposes at least, out of the pale of the law, should be competent to be a member of an assembly whose powers extend to the alteration of the law.

If we look at the 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, made for the relief of persons professing other creeds than Protestant Christianity, we find, that although those persons are relieved from the necessity of taking the sacrament according to the rites of the Protestant Church, yet they are required to take an oath couched in these words:—"On the true faith of a Christian." Whence it is to be concluded that as to the offices enumerated in that act at least, and it includes nearly all offices of public trust, none but Christians were intended by the law to be eligible to hold such offices. And it would be strange that the law should exclude a Jew from the office of town councillor or mayor of a corporation on account of his religion, and yet allow him to be a member of the superior assembly whose fiat may unmake the petty Parliaments in which it is not thought fit to include him.

On the other hand, the legal capacity of a Jew is, in most things, equal to that of a Christian. That a Jew may purchase and hold land we take to be clear. A popular prejudice, founded on some shew of legal reasoning, has assumed that he cannot; and, from various causes with which we have at present no concern, it is true that few Jews do hold land. The case most relied upon was cited in the Bedford Charity case, (2 Swanst. 503), from Lord Coke's Com. 31. b.:—"If a Jew born in England taketh to wife a Jew born also in England, the husband is converted to the Christian faith, purchaseth lands, and infeofeth another and dyeth; the wife brought her writ of dower, and was barred of her dower, and the reason yielded in the record is this:—Quia vero contra justitiam est quod ipsa dotem petat vel habeat de tenemento quod fuit viri sui; ex quo in conversione sua noluit cum eo adherere et cum eo converti." Now, notwithstanding the observation of the learned Editor of Jarman's Precedents, (3rd Edit., Vol. 1, p. 156), we conceive it difficult to understand this case, unless it was the law that a Jew could not hold land. For if that was not the law, what had his conversion to do with the matter? and why should his wife's non-conversion have damaged her title to dower. However, we conceive it to be quite clear, that at this day a Jew may lawfully hold land. For it is settled, that a Jew may present to a living, (7 Bligh, 322), which he could not do, of course, unless he could be seized of the advowson, which is real estate. But an inference flows from this doctrine, which goes much further than to establish merely that he may hold land; for, if a Jew may present to a living, clearly the law does not treat his religious persuasion as inconsistent with the exercise of a public trust for the direct and exclusive benefit, not merely of Christianity, but of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Why, then, should it treat his religious persuasion as excluding him from the benefit of a public trust, which is not, even in legal theory, exclusively a trust for the benefit of Christianity, and is in practice and in fact a trust for the benefit of many thousands of subjects of the Crown, not Christians? But the greatest difficulty in the way of holding a Jew incapable of sitting in Parliament is this; that of his exclusion or non-exclusion the House itself is the judge, subject only to a contest with the constituency; and that, in the absence of any specific act of Parliament, or direct authority for the exclusion of a Jew, there is nothing that the House can be required, or even expected, to hold binding upon its judicial conscience, to lead it to decide against the legal competency of a Jew to sit in Parliament. Our own impression is, on the whole, that there is no rule or principle of law excluding any natural born subject of the Queen from sitting in Parliament, on the ground of his religious persuasion, provided he will take the prescribed or customary oaths.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1884; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1884. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pillars of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of trial, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Not is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1884.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupillage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 460, 766.

"The want which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1857) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

Price 1s. 6d. sewed.

FINLASON'S LEADING CASES ON PLEADING.

Just published, in royal 8vo., price 12s. boards.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES ON PLEADING, and PARTIES to ACTIONS, with Practical Notes, elucidating the Principles of Pleading, (as exemplified in Cases of most frequent occurrence in Practice), by a reference to the earliest Authorities; and designed to assist both the Practitioner and Student. By W. FINLASON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Special Pleader.

"The Notes themselves are learned, and, we may add, elaborate Treatises upon the matters to which they relate. . . . The frequent reference to the very fountain heads of the Law,—the Year Books and the older Reports,—honourably distinguishes these Notes."—Law Magazine, No. 10, N. 8, February, 1847.

LONDON, OCTOBER 9, 1847.

THE doctrine laid down in Hall v. Hugonin, (14 Sim. 595), has been confirmed by a very recent case, Bishopp v. Colebrook, (11 Jur. 793), so that it may be now considered settled almost beyond the possibility of dispute, that the reversionary interest of a married woman in personalty not settled to her separate use, is, by apt arrangement, capable of being barred.

In Hall v. Hugonin, the wife's reversionary interest was expectant, not on the decease of her husband, but of a stranger. The reasoning of the Vice-Chancellor was not, however, addressed to that point, but went simply to the question of the whole interest in the property being in the married woman. "Suppose," he said, "that a father gives a sum of stock to a trustee for his daughter Elizabeth for life, remainder to his daughter Mary, a married woman, absolutely; and that, immediately after his death, Elizabeth assigns her life interest to Mary. Are not, by that mere act, both the life interest of her sister and her own interest in remainder, vested in her? I do not put it as a case of merger. But I ask whether the married daughter has not both the interests? that is, the life interest of her sister and also her own absolute interest in remainder? If, then, she has the whole interest, is it not an interest with which she is as capable of dealing in this Court as if it had been given to her absolutely? It seems to me that it is; and, therefore, when the husband applies to the Court to have the fund transferred, and his wife consents, the trustee will be entirely safe in making the transfer; because when a married woman is entitled to the whole interest in a fund, whether given to her originally, or composed of a life interest aforesaid, to her, and of the interest in reversion given to her, she may file a bill to have a settlement made on her. But if she consents in court to a transfer of the fund being made either to the husband or to his assignee, she waives all right to a settlement out of the aggregate fund."

In the case referred to, of Bishopp v. Colebrook, it was attempted to distinguish it from Hall v. Hugonin, on the ground that in the latter case the wife was entitled in remainder on the death of a person not her husband; whereas, in Bishopp v. Colebrook the life estate was in the husband; but of this distinction the Vice-Chancellor appears to have taken no note, resting his judgment, as in Hall v. Hugonin, entirely on the circumstance of the wife having acquired the whole absolute interest; so that the rule seems to be, that if the whole interest can be concentrated in the wife, no matter how, she may dispose of it. In a word, his Honor does not think there is any distinction between a fund in personalty given absolutely to the wife, and a fund in which she has an interest in reversion expectant on the death of another, whether of a stranger or of her husband is immaterial, joined to the preceding interest, whatever it may be.

This doctrine may, as the Vice-Chancellor expresses it in Hall v. Hugonin, be convenient, but it does away with the last remnant of protection given by courts of equity to married women in respect of their personal estate.

The doctrine with regard to a personal fund vested in trustees, given absolutely to a married woman, has been long settled, and is perfectly intelligible. It is the husband's property at law, that is, it would be if it were vested in the wife instead of in her trustees. And if the trustees pay it to the husband, as they lawfully may, if there be no suit for a settlement, there is an end of the wife's right to a settlement, or to anything else out of the fund. Only as the husband cannot get it out of the hands of the trustees at law, equity refuses to take it from them, except upon terms for the benefit of the married woman, which benefit she may waive, if she thinks fit, by her consent in Court.

The effect of a gift of personal estate to the separate use of a married woman is also well settled and intelligible; and though by that contrivance, originally intended to protect a married woman, the very opposite result has been attained, and she has been, in respect of the disposition of her property, (when anticipation is not restrained), invested with a legal power, the possession of which is the very thing that practically destroys her protection, still the argument is, that, in giving her such power, the Courts are but carrying into effect the intention of the parties; and that if, by reason of the doctrine, a married woman is armed with a power fatal to her own protection, she has, or those who gave her the power have so willed it. Nor is there anything in the doctrine inconsistent with the principle of the law, as it only amounts to recognising the right of any person possessed of property to vest the legal estate in it in trustees, and to direct the destination of the trust estate, either to a particular person or according to the appointment of a particular person, whether that person be or be not sui juris.

But until the later decisions, it was certainly not settled that an interest in a married woman, incapable of itself of being reduced into possession, could be converted by the act of a stranger into an interest reducible into possession, for the express purpose of placing it at her disposal, and thus practically depriving her of the only protection of which she is capable, viz. the protection of legal disability.

His Honor the Vice-Chancellor expressly disclaims putting it as a case of merger, and treats the question as depending on the married woman being entitled to the whole interest in the fund, no matter how she became so entitled; and on this ground he has held, that, as a married woman so entitled may file a bill for a settlement, so she may consent in court to a transfer of the entire fund to her husband, or to his assignee. We conceive, that, under Hall v. Hugonin and Bishopp v. Colebrook, it is not necessary to have the wife's consent in court as a matter of course; that is, that, when the preceding estates have been so dealt with as to entitle the married woman to the whole fund, the trustees will be justified, if no suit is instituted by the wife for a settlement, in transferring the fund at once to the husband. It is true, that, in both cases, the Vice-Chancellor has said that the wife may, by consenting in court, waive all right to a settlement; but we conclude, that he does not mean to say that the trustees may not, without suit, transfer the fund to the husband. The whole doctrine of reversionary interests in married women is, however, so full of mystery, so surrounded by difficulties, both on authority and on principle, that, unless a case is on all fours with Hall v. Hugonin or Bishopp v. Colebrook, that is, unless it is quite clear that the whole interest in the fund is in some way or other vested in, or in trust for, the married woman, we should pause before recommending trustees to transfer a trust fund, except under the direction of the Court.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Richard England, Gent., of Kingston-upon-Hull, to be a Master Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where the warden of Wadham College refused to affix the common seal of the college to an answer of the fellows and other officers of the college to a bill filed in Chancery against them, and which he objected to because he disapproved of their answer, the Court granted a mandamus to compel him. (Res v. Windham, Cowp. 377). So, a mandamus lies to the keepers of the common seal of the University of Cambridge, commanding them to put it to the instrument of appointment of their high steward, pursuant to a grace passed in senate. (Res v. The Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, 3 Burr. 1647; S. C., 1 Bl. Rep. 547; see Res v. Kendall, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 866). So, a mandamus lies to the Chancellor of the University of Cambridge to restore a person to academic degrees, of which he was deprived on the ground of an alleged contempt. (Res v. Cambridge, 1 Stra. 557; S. C., 2 Ld. Raym. 1334). So, a mandamus lies to the master of a college to admit a fellow duly elected; or the nominee of the founder's heir, in whom the right of nomination vested. (Res v. Blythe, 5 Mod. 404; S. C., Sir T. Raym. 12; Reg. v. St. Peter's College, Cambridge, 9 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 321; see also Usher's case, 5 Mod. 452; Res v. St. John's College, 4 Mod. 233). So, a mandamus lies to the masters and fellows of a college to restore one to an usher's place of a free grammar school, of which they were visitors. (Craford case, Sty. 457; query, if the visitors had deprived him on the ground of non-observance of the rules for government of the school? see Res v. Ely, 5 T. R. 475). To restore a schoolmaster of a grammar school founded by the Crown. (Res v. Morpeth, 1 Stra. 58). So, a mandamus lies to the visitor of a college in one of the universities if he refuses to exercise his visitatorial power by receiving and hearing an appeal to compel him; but if the judgment of the visitor be ever so erroneous, the Court cannot interfere in order to correct it. (Res v. Bishop of Ely, 5 T. R. 475; Phillips v. Bury, 2 T. R. 346; S. C., 1 Stra. 15; 4 Mod. 106; Res v. Bishop of Lincoln, 2 T. R. 368). So, a mandamus lies to the Bishop of Ely, as visitor of Peterhouse College, to appoint one of two fellows, nominated and presented to him by the fellows, to be master of the college. Ashurst, J., said:—It does appear to me, that this is not a case within the bishop's visitatorial power, since the statutes of the college have restrained him from making use of that power in the present instance. I admit, that in every case within a visitor's power, and where he sits in the exercise of that power, his acts are not to be questioned in courts of law. The founder has thought fit, by the statutes, to invest the Bishop of Ely with general visitatorial power, but he had a right to restrain him in certain cases if he thought proper; and, to those objects, the bishop is not visitor. Then it is material to consider, whether, under the statutes, this be not a case of that kind. I confess I am of opinion that, on the true construction of the statute de electione magistris, the power of the bishop is limited and restrained. In this instance the bishop cannot interfere as visitor: the only power which he can exercise is to judge of the fitness of the two persons nominated by the fellows. (Res v. The Bishop of Ely, 2 T. R. 290, 335). And, where the founder of an hospital for the sustentation and relief of certain poor persons named in the grant, by the rules of which, preference was to be given to the poor people of certain towns, appointed visitors to correct all abuses, and see to the due execution of the grant; and, afterwards, the heir of the founder, upon a vacancy of one of the brethren, appointed a person to succeed not belonging to the towns so named, against which appointment three persons belonging to the towns next in the order of rotation appealed, on the ground that the appointee was ineligible; the Court granted a mandamus to the visitors who had heard the evidence on such appeal, but declined to act to compel them to proceed and determine the appeal. (Res v. The Bishop of Worcester, 4 M. & S. 415; see also Phillips v. Bury, 2 T. R. 249).

If the visitor of a college has heard and decided on an appeal the Court has no authority to examine the legality of the judgment, and therefore will not issue a mandamus to try its merits. Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "It has been settled for near a century that this Court has no other power than that of putting the visitatorial power in motion, but that, if the judgment of the visitor be ever so erroneous, we cannot interfere in order to correct it. Now here the visitor received the appeal; each party disclosed his case to him; the whole merits of the case were before him; and he has exercised his judgment upon the whole. If, therefore, we were to interfere, it would be for the purpose of controlling his judgment." (Res v. The Bishop of Ely, 5 T. R. 475; Phillips v. Bury, 2 T. R. 346; Res v. The Chancellor of Cambridge, 6 T. R. 89). Therefore a mandamus does not lie to restore a fellow of a college where there is a visitor to whom appeals are to be made, and who on appeal had confirmed the matter of appeal. (Res v. New College, Oxford, 2 Lev. 14; S. C., 1 Mod. 82; Dr. Widdrington's case, 1 Lev. 23; Sir T. Raym. 111; Parkinson's case, Carth. 92; S. C., 3 Mod. 265). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge to restore a fellow who has been banished by the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor's Court for an offence committed against the statutes of the university. (6 T. R. 89). Nor does a mandamus lie to restore a prebend where he has been deprived by the visitor upon good cause. (Res v. The Bishop of Chester, 1 Wils. 206). Nor does a mandamus lie to the President and College of Physicians to examine a person as to his qualification and fitness to be admitted a fellow into the corporation; (Res v. The President of the College of Physicians, 7 T. R. 282; see also Res v. Dr. Askew, 4 Burr. 2186); nor to restore a member of the College of Physicians; (Dr. Merrick's case, cited in Parkinson's case, ubi sup., and cases in last note). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to compel the College of Physicians to admit a person as one of their members or as a licentiate: (per Abbott, C. J., Res v. The Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, 4 B. & C. 859); nor to compel the benchers of one of the inns of Court to admit an individual, as a member of the society, with a view to his qualifying himself to be called, or when admitted, to call him to the bar. I am of opinion, says Abbott, C. J., that this Court has no power to compel the benchers of this society to permit any individual to become a member of the society, or to assign any reasons why they do not admit him. There is not any instance where a mandamus has been applied for to compel any such society to admit a person a member. In Res v. The Benchers of Gray's Inn, Lord Mansfield, speaking of these societies, says, "They are voluntary societies." The very term "voluntary society" imports in it a discretion in the individuals composing it to admit or reject members as they please. It is true, that the twelve judges are the visitors of the inns of courts, but, in that character, they have jurisdiction only over actually admitted members. When Lord Mansfield said they were "voluntary societies, which for ages have submitted to government analogous to that of other seminaries of learning," he must be understood to have meant that they submit to such rules and regulations as they themselves ordained for the internal government of the society, but not that they submit to any order of a foreign jurisdiction as to the persons whom they are to admit as members. If the party now applying to the Court were an actually admitted member of the society, and had acquired an inchoate right capable of being perfected, it might then be fit for this Court (in the absence of any other remedy) to interfere by mandamus, in order to perfect that right; but if the particular society improperly refuse to call a particular member to the bar, the remedy is not by mandamus, but by appeal to the twelve judges. (Res v. The Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, 4 B. & C. 858; S. C., 7 Dowl. & Ry. 351; and see Res v. The Benchers of Gray's Inn, Doug. 339). In the case of D. W. Harvey there was such an appeal, but it was unsuccessful. Nor to the principal and ancients of Barnard's Inn to admit an attorney into the society, it not appearing that the Court had the requisite authority over the inn. (Res v. Barnard's Inn, 5 Adol. & Ell. 17; see Reg. v. The Mayor and Aldermen of London, 16 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 185). And where a rule nisi was granted for a mandamus to the principal of Clifford's Inn to attend the benchers of the Inner Temple, and produce the records and regulations of the society of Clifford's Inn to enable the benchers to decide on the validity of his election to that office, the Court, on shewing cause, discharged the rule, no sufficient proof appearing that the benchers of the Inner Temple had a compulsory authority over Clifford's Inn for this purpose. (Res v. Allen, 5 B. & Adol. 984). Nor does a mandamus lie to admit an attorney of one of the superior courts, that being discretionary in the judge who examines him, and the only remedy is by petition to the Court. (2 Geo. 2, c. 23, ss. 2 to 6; 23 Geo. 2, c. 26, s. 15; see Reg. v. The Mayor and Aldermen of London, supra). We have already seen, (ante, p. 19), that, at common law, if members of corporations refused or neglected to choose such proper officers as they ought, it was a forfeiture of their charter, though, in some cases, the Court was authorised to grant a mandamus to fill up certain vacancies, and where there was an omission to elect, or an officer was unduly chosen, there was no power to compel an election before the charter-day to remedy the inconvenience that was occasioned by these defaults. Certain provisions were made by statute to prevent their re-occurrence. The Court of Queen's Bench can now, however, compel the members of a corporation to proceed to the election of their officers, and do all other necessary acts to complete it, and for this purpose a mandamus lies in all cases concerning corporate officers, from the highest to the lowest, either to elect, or, where elected, to admit, or, if wrongfully removed, to restore. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 26, extends the power and authority given to the Court by stat. 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, to elections under the Municipal Corporation Act. We will now proceed to consider these in their order.

Where, by a charter, it was directed that the mayor and chief burgesses should fill up all vacancies of the burgesses that should occur from time to time, the Court granted a mandamus to the mayor to convene a meeting to proceed to an election in order to fill up five vacancies in a select body consisting of fifteen burgesses. (Res v. The Mayor of Monmouth, 4 B. & Ald. 496). So, the Court granted a mandamus to the mayor to proceed to an election of burgesses, in order to fill up two vacancies occasioned by death, although there was a quo warranto information depending against the mayor, questioning his title. (Res v. Grampsound, 6 T. R. 301). Where, by an act of 8 Geo. 4, it was enacted, "that the mayor, sheriffs, citizens, and commonalty of the city of Norwich, at an assembly to be held within three calendar months before the 4th May in each succeeding year, should elect twenty persons to be guardians of the poor of the said city, and that on the Monday in Easter week in every succeeding year there should be elected for each pariah, hamlet, &c. of the said city and county, an additional number of persons to be guardians of the poor, amounting in the whole to forty-eight, and that the several persons so elected should enter upon the office of guardians on the 4th day of May next ensuing their election;" there was then a proviso that, in case default should be made in the election of a guardian or guardians, the other guardians might proceed in the execution of the act as fully and effectually as if the election of the guardians had effectually taken place; the mayor, sheriffs, citizens, and commonalty having neglected to elect twenty persons to be guardians within the time prescribed, the Court granted a mandamus to compel them to do so, holding that the clause fixing the time of election was directory. Res. v. Norwich, (1 B. & Adol. 310). Where by a charter it was granted that upon the death or amotion of a principal burgess, who was appointed to hold for life, it should be lawful for the mayor and the remaining principal burgesses within eight days next following to elect another; the eight days after a vacancy having elapsed without an election, the Court granted a mandamus upon the stat. 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 2, to proceed to the election of two principal burgesses. (Res. v. Thetford, 8 East, 210; Corporation of Scarborough, 2 Str. 1180; Res. v. Woodrow, 2 T. R. 732; see also 1 Roll. Abr. 513, 514). Where a charter of incorporation, after ordaining who should be entitled to be burgesses, directed that they should make application for that purpose to the mayor and commonalty on a day certain in each year, and at no other time, and then make due and legal proof of their qualifications, certain persons claiming to be admitted burgesses made application to the mayor and commonalty on the charter day, and offered to make due and legal proof of their qualifications, but their applications were not heard, nor their proofs received, on account of the time having been occupied in other business; the Court granted a mandamus to the mayor and commonalty to enter an adjournment to a subsequent day, and then to hold a meeting, and receive and examine such proofs &c. (Res. v. Carmarthen, 1 M. & Scott, 697). The Court will grant a mandamus to proceed to an election, although there has been an officer chosen, if it appear that it is colourable, and clearly void, (Res. v. Cambridge, 4 Burr. 2008; Res. v. Bedford, 1 East, 79; Res. v. Banks, 3 Burr. 1454), even although the party illegally elected have been sworn in, and be at the time in the actual exercise of the office. (Res. v. The Mayor of Leeds, 11 Adol. & Ell. 512). But if the validity of the election is doubtful, it seems the Court will not grant the writ until the question is finally settled. (Res. v. The Mayor of Winchester, 7 Adol. & Ell. 215; Res. v. Derby, Id. 419; Res. v. Beedle, 3 Adol. & Ell. 467). A mere de facto election is not sufficient to prevent the Court from issuing a mandamus. The meaning of the 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, is, "where no due legal valid election has been made upon the charter or usage day," the Court may grant a mandamus. (Per Cur., Id. 2011). So, a mandamus lies to the Court of the Mayor and Aldermen of London to proceed to an election, for the claim of cognisance by that court for the election of aldermen does not exclude the jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench to issue a mandamus. (Res. v. London, 4 M. & R. 36; 9 B. & C. 1). On application to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus for the election of burgesses and aldermen, the Court refused to fix any specific day, but left it to the proper officer. (Res. v. The Mayor of Bridgewater, 2 Chit. 256). In the case of annual offices, it may be observed, that, in the event of no new election taking place on the day appointed, the old officers continue till others are elected. (Foot v. Prowse, 1 Stra. 625; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 78*).

LONDON, OCTOBER 16, 1847.

PRIVILEGES are in general odious to all except the parties privileged. Independently of this fact, which is to be accounted for by a reference to the principles of human nature, there is a tendency at the present time, as a result of public enlightenment, to narrow, as much as possible, the claims of individual or class exemption from the obligations imposed by general law. A more solid foundation than antiquated notions or legal fictions is now required for such exemption. Thus, it has been recently contended, that the period of eighty days is no longer necessary for a member of Parliament to travel from St. Stephen's to any part of the kingdom and back again; the immunity from arrest enjoyed by the "Somerset Herald" has been disputed, (Dyer v. Dimey, 16 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 182), and objection has been taken to the privilege of attorneys of suing and being sued only in the courts at Westminster.

The last-mentioned privilege, to which we shall now confine our remarks, is said to be founded on the supposition that the constant attendance of attorneys is required in the superior courts, to use the words of Willes, C. J., "for the sake of justice and the benefit of all the people of England." (Welles v. Trehern, Willes, 240).

The first blow struck at this foundation was the decision that since the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, an attorney may be arrested on mesne process; (Thompson v. Moore, 1 Dowl., N. S., 283); thus making the fiction of his continuous personal presence in Westminster Hall, yield to the stern reality of his being about to quit the kingdom.

A second blow was lately aimed at this "privilegium," by suing an attorney in the County Court of Warwickshire, (Thompson v. Harding), but the learned judge, we understand, decided in favour of the privilege, that is, that attorneys are exempt from the operation of the Small Debts Act, (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), and are entitled to sue and be sued in their own courts at Westminster, wherever they or the other party may reside, and whatever may be the amount of the claim.

The judgment proceeded on the ground, that, as attorneys are not expressly named in the clause taking away privileges, they are not affected by it. The words of that clause (sect. 67) are, "No privilege, except as hereinafter excepted, shall be allowed to any person to exempt him from the jurisdiction of any Court holden under this act." Attorneys are not thereafter excepted, nor is their privilege taken away, unless it be by the words of the above clause. The question, therefore, is, whether these words are not sufficiently specific in their terms to include attorneys, or whether the privileged class to be affected must be expressly named as such. The clause is negative, and as to the subject-matter, viz. privilege, is special. It seems to be equivalent to an enactment, that no privileged class (except as thereafter excepted) shall be exempt from the provisions of the statute. Now, if it is necessary to mention attorneys by name in taking away their privilege, it would appear to be also necessary to mention, in like manner, every other privileged class; and if so, this clause will have no effect whatever.

The rights of the Courts of the Universities and of the Stannaries are expressly saved by sections 140 and 141, and, had it been the intention to exempt attorneys, it would have been easy to have inserted a like saving clause as to them. But such was not the intention; they come, equally with other classes, within the mischief which was to be remedied by the act.

A well-known distinction prevails between negative and affirmative statutes; and the rule, that a negative statute repeals former statutes, customs, and prescriptions which are contrary thereto, is discussed in the important case of Reg. v. The Mayor and Aldermen of London, (16 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 185), in which it was held, that sect. 27 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, enacting, that every person duly admitted an attorney of the superior courts shall be entitled to be admitted as an attorney in any inferior court, takes away the special custom which had prevailed in the Lord Mayor's Court, confining the practice therein to four attorneys only.

It is true, we find it laid down in the books, that "the general words of a statute do not take away a particular privilege or benefit." (2 Inst. 395; Com. Dig., "Parliament," R. 23). But this rule does not appear to apply to the case before us, inasmuch as we would contend, that the words in the 67th section of the Small Debts Act are special—not general; and also, that the above rule must be qualified by confining it merely to affirmative statutes. The illustration given both by Lord Coke and Chief Baron Comyns tends to shew that such is its effect. They refer to the fact, that the Statute of Westminster 2, c. 18, does not take away the privilege an infant has, that he shall not be sued during his nonage, if an elegit be against the heir of a co-nuor being an infant. But the words of that statute are not only general, but also affirmative:—"It shall be in the election of him that sueth to have a writ of fi. fa., &c., or that the sheriff shall deliver to him all the chattels of the debtor and the one-half of his land."

An examination of the cases on which the decision in the county court proceeded, and of some others bearing on the subject, will not, we think, be found to support that decision to its full extent.

In Welles v. Trehern, (Willes, 240), which involved a question between the conflicting privileges of the University of Oxford and of an attorney, it was said by Willes, C. J., "As they (attorneys) have been entitled to this privilege (suing and being sued in their own courts) time out of mind, no charter of the king can take it away from them, nor even an act of Parliament, unless they are therein mentioned by express words."

But it may be observed, that this was a mere dictum of the learned judge, wholly unnecessary for the decision of the case, which went off upon other grounds; secondly, the chief justice referred to the case of The Oxford Letters Patent, (Littleton's Rep. 304), to Butt's case, (1 Roll. Abr. 439), and to Lord Anderson's case, (3 Leon. 149), in support of his dictum; but not one of these cases goes to the extent that a privilege will avail against the negative words of a statute.

In The Oxford Letters Patent case, it was held, that the grant of consuance of pleas to the Oxford University did not take away the special privilege of an attorney. But this grant, which was confirmed by a statute of Queen Elizabeth, and which is set out at length in a note to Willes, p. 234, is general and affirmative in its terms.

In Butt's case, it is stated, that if an attorney of the King's Bench be sued in the King's Bench for land in a place, where another has consuance of pleas, the consuance shall not be allowed; for otherwise the officers of that court would be drawn into attendance on inferior courts. The terms of the grant of consuance are not set out, nor does it appear that it was confirmed by act of Parliament.

The case of Lord Anderson, who was Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, was an action of trespass brought by him against a citizen of the city of Worcester. The mayor and commonalty demanded consuance of the case under a charter granted to them by King Edw. 6, but it was denied. In this case it will be seen it was merely a charter, which cannot alter the common law, (Com. Dig. "Prærogative," D. 28), and not an act of Parliament, under which the consuance was claimed.

There are numerous cases to the effect that an attorney is not liable to the jurisdiction of courts of requests under certain statutes; (see Gardner v. Jessop, 2 Wils. 42; Wiltshire v. Lloyd, 1 Doug. 381; Boord v. Parker, 7 East, 46; Wright v. Skinner, 1 Mee. & W. 144); but they were decided upon the language of the respective statutes, none of which contained words equivalent to those in sect. 27 of the Small Debts Act. It should also be remarked, that in Johnson v. Bray, (1 B. & B. 700), Dallas, C. J., said, with regard to this privilege that it may be taken away "by the express words of an act of Parliament, or by the construction of an act, in which express words are not to be found." The learned judge referred to Evans v. Jones, (6 T. R. 500), in support of this position; but that case appears to have turned upon the fact of the privilege having been waived, rather than of its non-existence.

Upon this review of the statute and the cases, we submit that attorneys are subject to the jurisdiction of the courts established under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. We have laid before our readers materials by which they may judge for themselves. It is desirable that the question should soon be re-considered, and that it should be decided more satisfactorily than it is at present.

Since writing the above, we understand that judgment has been given in a case in the Devonshire County Court, (Mitroy v. Gill), to the effect, that attorneys are liable to be sued in the Small Debts Courts in the same manner as other persons.

*.* The design of this work, as its title imports, is to bring the narratives of these witnesses to the tests usually applied to the evidence of other transactions in courts of law, as well documentary as oral, in order to ascertain what degree of credit they would be entitled to receive in human tribunal. The principles of the law of Evidence applicable to such subjects, are stated in a Preliminary Discourse, in which also the characters and situation of the Evangelists, their motives of conduct, and the nature and probability of their narratives and assertions are examined. The Four Gospels are exhibited in parallel columns, arranged after the order of Archbishop Newcome's Harmony, as recently corrected and published by Professor Robinson. In the Appendix is contained a legal account of the two Trials of Jesus, before the Sanhedrim and Pilate; and a translation of the Jewish account of those transactions, given by M. Salvador, a learned Jew, in his Histoire des Institutions de Moise et du Peuple Hébreu. The work is inscribed to the members of the legal profession; but it will be found equally interesting to clergymen, and to all others who may be disposed to examine the subject.

LONDON, OCTOBER 23, 1847.

HAD our recent comments upon the disgraceful state of the law relating to seduction required any further illustration, it would have been fully afforded by a case which has appeared in the Journals during the past week. A person of fortune was charged before the Lord Mayor with having abducted the daughter of a respectable tradesman. The seducer planned the ruin of his victim in the most systematic and artful manner; he took lodgings near her father's house in order to carry out his purpose; at length enticed her from her home, effected his object under the pretence that he would marry her, and then abandoned her to her fate. The girl was nineteen years of age, therefore the charge of abduction fell to the ground, the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 131, applying only where the age is under sixteen years.

Is there no remedy for such an injury as this? Is there no tribunal to which the sorrowing father can appeal for justice? Such are the questions which naturally occur. It is now established beyond all doubt by the decisions of our Courts, that the fiction of loss of service is the legal foundation of the parent's complaint in these cases, that if the child be in the service of the seducer, the remedy is lost; and it is said to have been held in a trial before Wilde, C. J., a few months ago, that no action lies, if the daughter voluntarily abandons her home, and thus withdraws herself from the protection of her parent. We are not acquainted with the facts of that case, but we should have inclined to the opinion, that if she had been persuaded to leave by the seducer, whether by false pretences or not, the rights of third parties could not have been barred thereby; that she would, in fact, have been taken away; and that the clearly wrongful act of seducing her from the service of her parent, without reference to her seduction from virtue, could not have been set up as an answer to the more serious charge.

Even in the present most defective condition of our law on this subject, we should think there would be a remedy, under the circumstances which we have stated. The question now always is—Did the relation of master and servant exist at the time when the injury was committed? Having been shewn to have once existed, was it put an end to by the wrongful act of the defendant? It is not necessary, in all cases, that the daughter should be under the roof of her parent when the seduction occurred. A mere temporary absence, as a visit to a friend, with an animus revertendi, will not bar the action. (Booth v. Charlton, 5 East, 47; Blaymire v. Hayley, 6 Mee. & W. 57). And the present is stronger than the Nisi Prius case of Speight v. Olivier, (2 Stark. 493), in which it was held by Abbot, C. J., that the action would lie, where the defendant, with intent to seduce the daughter, had hired her, and by this means obtained possession of her person. The learned judge asked, "Had she ceased to be the servant of her father? If the jury be of opinion that the defendant practised a fraud and contrivance to procure her to leave her father's house, without any real intention to hire her as a servant, I am of opinion that the action is maintainable."

In the present case, there was not even a pretence of hiring. It may be said that Speight v. Olivier was merely a Nisi Prius decision; it was, however, the decision of a very eminent judge; and, on its being cited in Harris v. Butler, (2 Mee. & W. 542), Parke, B., recognised it, and said, "There, the wrong was done under colour of a contract, and the defendant's fraud did not destroy the original relationship between the father and the child. In the case of Dean v. Peel, (5 East, 45), though the daughter was not at her father's house at the time, she was only casually absent on a visit with animus revertendi; and, as Lord Ellenborough observed, "In those cases the implied relationship of master and servant continued."

An indictment lies for seducing a servant from her master, or a wife from her husband; and in Lord Grey's case, (9 St. Tr. 127), it was maintained for a conspiracy to entice away a young lady with intent to seduce her.

We, therefore, trust there does remain a remedy, however inefficient; either by action or indictment, for so gross a wrong as we have stated, but it is monstrous, that, in these days, absurd fictions should prevent substantial justice from being done, or should throw doubts and difficulties in the way of those who are entitled to claim it. Surely, the Legislature are bound to interfere, and to enact that proof of the mere injury itself, the seduction of a daughter, shall be sufficient to entitle the parent to damages. We should like to see the whole class of cases on this subject rendered of no authority by such an enactment, and to behold the "per quods" and "servitiums," as connected with so serious an injury, consigned to the tomb of the "latitans" and "quo minus."

The feeling in this respect among lawyers, as we should think among all classes, has long been in advance of the law itself; and in looking through the decisions on the matter, we find even the reporters laying aside their customary reserve, and giving vent to their opinions.

In a note to Grinnell v. Wells, (7 Man. & Gr. 1044), it is forcibly said, "The quasi fiction of servitium amicitie affords protection to the rich man, whose daughter occasionally makes his tea, but leaves without redress the poor man, whose child is sent unprotected to earn her bread among strangers." And in a note to Speight v. Olivier, Mr. Starkie thus expresses himself:—"The claim to damages in such cases, which is founded upon principles of strictest justice, the enforcement of which is absolutely essential to curb licentiousness and preserve the morals of society, ought not to depend on a mere fiction, over which the Courts possess no control. It is a reproach to the law of England that the right to damages should not be necessarily consequent on the injury. Surely it is worthy the attention of the Legislature to find a remedy for an evil of such magnitude."

OBSERVATIONS ON THE EXECUTION OF WILLS.

Some very singular decisions (Ayres v. Ayres, 11 Jur. 417; Willis v. Lowe, Id. 807) have recently been made in the Prerogative Court, on the construction of the 9th clause of the Wills Act, by which it will be recollected that a will "shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator," &c.

In Ayres v. Ayres the body of the will was written on one side of a sheet of paper, leaving a blank space of about two inches at the bottom; and then the attestation clause and signature were written about the middle of the second side. There were several interlineations and alterations in the body of the will; but there was no evidence to shew whether they were made before or after the signing. It was held that the will was not properly signed at the foot or end thereof, according to the statute. In Willis v. Lowe the body of the will was contained in the two first sides of a sheet of letter paper, ending about two-thirds down the second side; there were several alterations or interlineations; the signature and attestation clause were on the third side, beginning at a distance from the top; and Sir H. Jenner Fust, in this case also, that the testatrix did not sign her name at the foot or end of the will. It would have been satisfactory if the learned judge had said in this case, where, in relation to the will, the testatrix did sign, if she did not sign at the foot or end of it. She did not sign at the beginning, that is clear. Neither did she sign at any part of the body of the will, nor at any of the sides or corners of it. Where then did she sign except at the end, if she signed the will at all? The rule laid down by this case is one of proportion, without any standard being fixed by which to measure the proportion. The Court did not accede to the argument that the attestation clause, or the names of the testator and witnesses, should follow the end of the will as near as possible. Yet it held the signature not at the end of the will, because it was a good way off. What then is the specific distance from the end of a will within which the act justifies the signing?

The reasoning in Ayres v. Ayres upon the equity of the statute, that it was intended to prevent anything being done to the will after execution, or to prevent the whole of the will from being written after the signature and attestation, might be proper in that case, where, if there was not prima facie ground for presuming that something had been done after the execution of the will, there was, at least, the absence of prima facie ground for presuming that nothing had been done; the alterations and interlineations unexplained affording ground for at least doubting whether the will was complete at the time of its execution. But in Lowe v. Willis there was neither alteration nor interlineation; nothing, in fact, on which to found any doubt whether the will was as originally written, nor anything on which to found a presumption rebutting the natural presumption arising from a person purporting to sign a will, viz. that there is a will for him to sign. The rule suggested by the counsel opposing probate, and rejected by the Court, that the proper construction of the act is, that the signature of the testator should be as near the foot or end of the will as circumstances admit, would at least have an approach to something positive. If there was at all room for the signature and attestation, the case of The Goods of Carver, and the other cases of that nature, cited in Ayres v. Ayres, would not apply; and though, even in this way of construing the act, there would be some degree of vagueness, because, whether there is room for a signature may depend on the length of the name and the habitual mode of signing of the testator, still, most persons, on looking at a writing on a piece of paper, would agree in their judgment, whether there was or was not, at its conclusion, the minimum of space within which a signature could be inserted. But when we depart from this rule, and yet do not adopt the broader rule, that a signature placed anywhere after the conclusion of a written instrument is written at the end of it, but hover between the two extremes, and say that, whether a signature is at the end of a will or not depends on the quantity of space left waste between the conclusion of the will and the signature, an element of such great uncertainty is introduced into the rule, that it is really as bad as judging by the length of the Chancellor's foot.

What test, we would ask, is there in the common understanding of language, of one writing being at the end of another, except its being on the same piece of paper or parchment, or attached to the same piece of paper or parchment as the conclusion of the first writing, and, following such conclusion, in contradistinction to preceding it, or bearing any other local relation to it? That the statute did not limit the locality of the signature of a will to the spot immediately below its conclusion, is admitted by the Court in both the cases cited. But if so, what is the space that may intervene without taking the signature away from the end? Is it necessary at all that it should be on the same page? That is not the decision in Willis v. Lowe; nor is it consistent with the reasoning of that case; because, clearly, if a will concluded at or near the top of a page, and the signature were at the bottom, there would be quite as strong ground for the argument that something might be added after the signature, as when the will concluded at or near the end of the first page, and the signature is half way down the second. In fact, no rule, we submit, can be extracted from the cases on which we are commenting, except that the signature need not be quite close to the end of the will, but must not be very far away from it; and it remains to be ascertained what is the judicial standard by which the distance is to be measured. Until that is done, or until it is decided or enacted, that so many inches of waste and no more are allowed between the conclusion of a will and the commencement of the signature, the construction of the Wills Act is obscured rather than made manifest by the cases of Ayres v. Ayres and Willis v. Lowe, and particularly by the latter.

LONDON, OCTOBER 30, 1847.

Two cases of some importance have recently been decided upon the subject of notice of dishonour. The first relates to the sufficiency of the notice in its terms, and the second to the sufficiency of an excuse for not giving it.

The rationale of notice of dishonour is the presumption that the acceptor has funds of the drawer in his hands, and non-payment should be notified to him in order to put him on his guard, that he may withdraw these effects as speedily as possible. The notice may be given by any party to the bill (or by his agent) subsequent to the drawer or other party to whom it is given. It may now be regarded as an established rule, that the notice must shew three things: first, that the bill has been presented for payment; secondly, that it has not been paid; and, thirdly, that the party to whom the notice is given is looked to for payment. (Per Coleridge, J., in East v. Smith, 16 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 292).

Notice of these things must be given expressly or by necessary implication. The legal meaning of notice in this case is something more than mere knowledge of the facts, and includes an intimation from the party giving it of the fact of dishonour, and that the party to whom it is given is looked to for payment. (Per Parke, B., in Carter v. Flower, 11 Jur. 313; 16 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 201, S. C.; and see Burgh v. Legge, 5 Mee. & W. 418; and East v. Smith, supra).

And the expression "necessary implication" signifies not natural necessity, but so strong a probability, that an intention contrary to that which is imputed cannot be supposed. (Per Parke, B., in Lewis v. Gompertz, 6 Mee. & W. 402).

One of the recent cases to which we have above alluded is East v. Smith, (16 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 292), in which the facts were as follow:—It was an action on a bill of exchange by a second indorsee against the drawer. The bill was accepted by one Maclean, indorsed by the defendant to one Day, and by him to the plaintiff. On presentment, and acceptor's refusal to pay, the plaintiff's son went and told Day (the intermediate indorsee) and his foreman, that Maclean had not paid the bill. On the same day the foreman told the defendant that the plaintiff had presented the bill, but that it had not been taken up; on the following morning Day also informed the defendant of the non-payment in similar terms. The question was, whether such notice was sufficient? It will be observed that the notice was not given by the holder of the bill; and it is obvious that a third party or stranger may inform a party to a bill of the fact of its non-payment, without conveying, or intending to convey, to him the meaning that he will be looked to for payment. The informant has no right to the amount; he may be equally liable to pay it with the party informed, and, unless he be the agent of the holder, he has no authority to state expressly, and, therefore, certainly not to imply, that any one will be looked to for payment. In conformity with the principles which we have above stated, such a notice would be insufficient, and so it was accordingly held in this case. Notice that defendant would be looked to for payment was not given expressly, and it was not given by necessary implication, because the parties giving it had no authority to look to him or any one else for payment. Had such notice, however, been given by the holder of the bill, then it seems it would have been sufficient, as necessarily implying that payment was expected from the defendant. If A. is liable to me for a debt in the event of B.'s not paying it at a certain time, and I tell A. that B. has not paid it at that time, my words would convey an intimation to A. that I look to him for payment. By this distinction, Coleridge, J., in the case we are considering, reconciled his judgment with that of Lord Denman, in Furse v. Sharwood, (2 Q. B. Rep. 388), in which it was held, that if the holder communicates to the indorser or drawer merely that the bill has not been paid, it is sufficient. "It may be," says Coleridge, J., "that when a third party makes a statement of the dishonour of a bill, it may not convey to the party to whom it is given notice that he will be looked to for payment; but that, when the notice is given by the actual holder, it must mean that he will look to the party receiving that notice for payment."

The reason for giving notice of dishonour fails where the drawer has not any effects in the hands of the acceptor, for then he is presumed to have notice that the bill will not be paid, and, also, he cannot sustain any injury from the want of notice. Cessante ratione legis cessat ipsa lex, in such case, therefore, no notice is necessary to the drawer; but the grounds for this exception to the general rule of law must appear on the record in an action against him in the form of a sufficient excuse sufficiently stated. This exception, which was first introduced in the case of Bickerdike v. Bollman, (5 T. R. 405), has been frequently regretted, because it substituted knowledge for notice, and introduced nice distinctions into the law instead of adhering to a plain and intelligible rule. (Per Abbott, C. J., in Cory v. Scott, 8 B. & C. 622). The case of Carter v. Flower (11 Jur. 313; 16 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 201) has decided the question as to what amounts to a sufficient excuse for not giving notice to an indorser, who stands on a different footing from a drawer, as he is in the nature of a surety or guarantor of its payment on due presentment, and is presumed to know nothing about the arrangement between the drawee and drawer. (Story on Bills, s. 314). Carter v. Flower was an action by an indorsee of a promissory note against the indorser, to whom it had been indorsed by the payee; and the declaration alleged, as an excuse for notice, that, neither at the time when the note was made, nor afterwards and before it became due, nor when it became due and on presentment for payment, had the maker or the payee any effects of the defendant in his hands, nor was there any consideration or value for the making of the note, for the payment thereof, or its indorsement by the payee to the defendant; and that the defendant had not sustained any damage by reason of his not having had notice of non-payment. The last averment of no damage was held to be insufficient, as it would have been in an action against a drawer; (see Dennis v. Morrice, 3 Esp. 158, and cases cited in Carter v. Flower); and this being rejected, the excuse rested upon these two grounds: first, that the other parties had no effects of defendant in their hands; and secondly, that there was no consideration given by the defendant for the indorsement to him, or by the payee to the maker for the making. Now, both of these allegations might be true, and yet the defendant might have indorsed the note for the accommodation of the payee or maker, in which case he would be entitled to notice, so that he might call on the party in whose favour he indorsed to pay the amount, and, if he himself were compelled to pay, he could recover over against that party. Thus, in Cory v. Scott, (3 B. & A.

619), the bill had been drawn for the accommodation of the indorsee, (L. & Co.), and neither drawer nor such indorsee had effects in the hands of the acceptor, the drawer was held entitled to notice of non-payment. It was there said by Bayley, J., "One test is this: suppose the drawer to pay the bill, has he any remedy over against a third person? In the case of Bickerdike v. Bollman he had none; but here, if the defendant had paid the bill, he would clearly have had a remedy against L. & Co., (the indorsee), because they impliedly undertook to indemnify him." This case was recognised and acted upon in Norton v. Pickering, (8 B. & C. 610); see also Smith v. Becket, (13 East, 187).

Henceforth, therefore, it will be necessary, in alleging an excuse for notice in an action against an indorser, to negative the fact of his having indorsed the bill or note for the accommodation of any of the prior parties, and although the form of excuse given in the books of precedents is good against a drawer, (at all events, on general demurrer—see per Parke, B., Carter v. Flower), yet it is not sufficient against an indorser.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where persons have a previous inchoate right to be admitted into any office, the Court will perfect that right by compelling admission by mandamus. And, where it appeared by affidavit that one of two candidates for the office of registrar of the corporation of the Bedford Level had a majority upon election, by reason of certain illegal votes, the Court granted a mandamus to admit and swear the other, who appeared to have the greater number of legal votes; and this, although the first was admitted and sworn into office, there being no other specific, or, at least, no other such convenient mode of trying the right. (Re v. The Bedford Level Corporation, 6 East, 356; 2 Smith, 535; see also Re v. The Mayor of York, 4 T. R. 699). So, a mandamus lies to admit an apprentice to the freedom of the city, having served his apprenticeship. (Townsend's case, 1 Lev. 91; S. C., Sir T. Raym. 69). The rule in this case is absolute in the first instance. (Re v. Coventry, 3 Doug. 236). So, a mandamus was granted to admit to the place of a scholar in a college in the nomination of the mayor of Bristol, to whom the nomination appertained. (Re v. St. John's, Oxford, 4 Mod. 368). So, a mandamus to the mayor and aldermen of the city of London, to admit a person into the place and office of alderman; in which case it was held, that the custom set out for the lord mayor and aldermen to inquire into and adjudicate upon elections did not oust the jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench. (Re v. London, 9 B. & C. 1; Re v. London, 3 B. & Adol. 255; see also Re v. Johnson, 5 Adol. & Ell. 488*).

* By the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 25, on the 9th November in every third year from the passing of the act, one-half of the number of aldermen of every borough who shall have been longest aldermen without re-election shall go out of office, and the council shall elect others from the councillors, or from persons qualified to be councillors, to supply their places. And by sect. 27, whenever any extraordinary vacancy shall have taken place in the office of alderman of any borough, the council of the borough shall, within ten days after that vacancy shall occur, on a day to be fixed by the mayor for such purpose, elect some other fit person to fill such vacancy, either from the councillors, or from the persons qualified to be councillors; and in case any councillor shall be elected to fill the office of alderman, then the vacancy which will thereby be occasioned in the council, shall be filled up at the time and in the manner therein-

The Court will not refuse a mandamus to admit a party to an office to which he has been elected; although it appears, that to a similar mandamus granted in respect of a former election of the same party, a return was made, shewing an excuse valid in law, for not admitting him, for the prosecutor has a right to have the facts stated in the return, in order that he may have an opportunity of controverting the truth of them. (Res v. London, 5 B. & Ad. 233; S. C., 1 N. & M. 285). So, a mandamus lies to admit into the office of one of the jurates of a corporation. (Res v. Ryes, 2 Burr. 798; S. C., 2 Ld. Ken. 468). If a councillor of a corporation be ousted, and another elected in his stead, and such election be merely colourable, a mandamus will go to permit the ousted party to exercise his office, but not to restore him to his office. (Res v. The Mayor of Oxford, 6 Adol. & Ell. 349*). Any person whose claim shall have been rejected, or name expunged at the revision of the burgess-roll of any borough within the Municipal Corporation Act, may apply before the end of the term then next following to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus to the mayor for the time being of that borough to insert his name upon the burgess-roll, and thereupon the Court may inquire into the title of the applicant to be so inrolled; and if the Court shall award such mandamus, the mayor shall be bound to insert the name upon the burgess-roll, and shall add thereunto the words, "By order of the Court of Queen's Bench," and shall subscribe his name to such words; and thereupon the person whose name shall be added to the burgess-roll, shall be deemed a burgess in all respects as if his name had been put upon the burgess-roll by the mayor and assessors; and upon every such application, the Court shall have power to make such order with respect to costs as to the Court shall seem fit. (Reg. v. The Mayor of Lichfield, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 453; Reg. v. The Mayor of Lichfield, 2 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 693; Reg. v. The Mayor of Bridgnorth, 10 Adol. & Ell. 67; 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, 241).

Where it appeared that a person, elected mayor of a borough on the day appointed by the usage, was not qualified to accept the office, the Court granted a mandamus to the electors to proceed to a new election; the Court, however, expressed a doubt whether they could with propriety grant the writ in this case. (Res v.

after directed; and every person so elected an alderman to fill an extraordinary vacancy, shall hold such office until the time when the person in the room of whom he was chosen would regularly have gone out of office, and he shall then go out of office, but may be re-elected again if qualified. And by sect. 30, on the 1st November in every year, the burgesses in every borough shall openly assemble and elect from the persons qualified to be councillors, the councillors of such borough or such part of them as shall be needed to supply the places of those who shall go out of office. If the 1st November happens on Sunday, the election shall be had on the Monday. Sect. 31, one-third part of the councillors of every borough to go out of office annually. By 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 26, if the electors neglect or refuse to proceed to an election at the times specified, the Court has the like power to compel them, as granted by 11 Geo. 1, c. 4.

* The 12 Geo. 3, c. 21, s. 1, enacts, that where any person shall be entitled to be admitted a citizen, burgess, or freeman of any city, town corporate, &c., and shall apply to the mayor or other person having authority to admit citizens, burgesses, or freeman, and give notice, specifying the nature of his claim; and that, in the event of his refusing to admit such person so applying that a writ of mandamus will be applied for to compel such admission; if, after such notice the mayor or other officer shall refuse or neglect to admit such person, and a mandamus issues to compel it, and such person be afterwards admitted in obedience to such writ, such person shall receive from the mayor, &c., so neglecting or refusing all costs to which he shall have been put in procuring such admission, unless the Court shall otherwise order.

Bedford Corporation, 1 East, 79; see also Res v. Cambridge, 4 Burr. 2008). So, the Court granted a mandamus for the election of a new mayor, although a quo warranto was depending against the new mayor. (Res v. Bridgwater, 3 Doug. 379; Res v. The Corporation of Grampound, 6 T. R. 301). Where a defendant is ousted on a quo warranto, the prosecutor is entitled to the writ of mandamus for a new election, if he applies in a reasonable time; if he does not, the defendant is entitled to move for the writ; Res v. M'Kay, 4 B. & C. 658; S. C., 6 D. & R. 432; Res v. West Love, 3 Burr. 1386; Res v. Wigan, 2 Burr. 782; but he cannot apply till judgment of ouster be actually signed. (Res v. West Love, 3 Burr. 1386*).

If a party holding a corporate office has been legally elected or appointed, and be removed without sufficient cause, the Court will compel his restoration. Therefore, a mandamus lies to restore to the place of mayor, alderman, or capital burgess, (Braithwaite's case, Ventr. 19; Taylor's case, Poph. 133; 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 24); a jurat, (Anon., 1 Lev. 148); a common councilman, (Res v. Coventry, 1 Ray. 391; Jay's case, 1 Ventr. 302; Res v. Liverpool, 2 Burr. 734; The City of London v. Estwick, Sty. 32; Res v. Chester, 5 Mod. 10); a recorder, (Res v. The Corporation of Wells, 4 Burr. 1999; Hawley's case, Ventr. 143); a town-clerk, (Atdeley v. Joy, Poph. 176; S. C., Noy, 78; Res v. Cambridge, Sidf. 14; Sty. 457; see Dighton's case, Ventr. 77, 82); a liveryman, (Taverner's case, Sir T. Ray. 446); a burgess, (Clarke's case, Cro. Jac. 506; Res v. Wilton, 5 Mod. 267; Res v. Tedderley, Sidf. 14); a bailiff, (Roll. Abr. 450); a serjeant, (Ib.); or high steward, (Impey, Mand. 42, 43). So, the Court granted a mandamus to restore a party to the office of clerk or surveyor to the city works, although it was contended that the office was of a private nature. It seems, that, if the office is acquirable by purchase, and an oath of office, as well as oaths to government, are administered, it will be presumed to be public; and on this ground the Court granted the writ. (Res v. London, 2 T. R. 182, n.; see Iles' case, Ventr. 142, where it is said a mandamus was denied to one who was said to be master of the lord mayor's waterhouse). So, a mandamus was granted to restore the treasurer of the New River Company, for though it was but a private corporation, yet it was created by the King's letters-patent. (Res v. London, Lev. 123; S. C., Sidf. 169; 3 Mod. 334; S. P., Anon., 1 Stra. 696). So, a mandamus was granted to restore one to the office of freeman of the company of free fishermen of the manor of Faversham. (Res v. Faversham, 8 T. R. 352). If a burgess, under the Municipal Corporation Act, be wrongfully struck off the burgess-roll, the Court will grant a mandamus to restore it. The Court is bound to inquire into the title of the party seeking to have his name inserted. (Reg. v. Harwich, 8 Adol. & Ell. 919; Reg. v. Eye, 9 Adol. & Ell. 670). The rule under this statute is not peremptory in the first instance. A party who had been removed from being a member of a corporation, and restored by mandamus, cannot maintain an action for damages against the members of the corporation, who removed him by an act done in their corporate capacity, nor recover the costs of the mandamus. (Harrison v. Tappenden, 1 East, 555; S. C., 3 Esp. 278).

* The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 50, enacts, that every person elected as mayor, alderman or councillor, auditor or assessor of any borough within the act, shall be incapable of acting as such, except in administering the declaration in the act mentioned, until he shall have made and subscribed the declaration therein contained. As the law stood formerly, no person could take upon himself any corporate office, unless within twelve months previously to his election he had partaken of the sacrament. (13 Car. 2, st. 2, c. 1, s. 12). The 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, s. 1, repealed so much of those acts which required the partaking of the sacrament, and substituted a declaration in lieu. Sect. 3 directs the mode in which the declaration shall be administered.

In the event of a party being elected to a corporate office, and refusing to take upon himself and execute the duties of that office, the Court will compel him by mandamus, upon an affidavit stating the election and refusal. (Re v. Simmons, 3 Doug. 237). Although it appears, that, "by a bye-law, persons refusing to fill the office are subject to a fine," and that the party elected had paid the fine; for the payment of a fine imposed by the bye-laws of a corporation for refusing to accept a corporate office does not exempt the party elected from serving the office, and the Court will, notwithstanding, grant a mandamus to compel service. (Re v. Bower, 2 D. & R. 842; S. C., 1 B. & C. 585; see 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 51). So, the Court granted a mandamus to compel the person elected to take upon himself the office of mayor, although the defendant, who was a common councilman, had once served the office of mayor, and acted as justice of the peace for the town, and had since quitted the town, and resided four miles distant, having only a bank there, and was then acting magistrate for the county; and it was alleged, that the serving the office would compel him to remove his residence to the town, and prevent his acting as magistrate for the county. (Re v. Leland, 1 M. & S. 184). So, the Court granted a mandamus to a freeman of the city of Oxford to compel him to take upon himself the office of common councilman, although he had not taken the sacrament within a year before his election. (Re v. Walker, 6 M. & S. 277; see 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, which repeals the Corporation and Test Act, so far as relates to receiving the sacrament, and substitutes a declaration in lieu, s. 2).

Where an hospital, established for the relief of poor and needy persons, consisted of a master and twelve poor persons, in whom the advowson of a living was conveyed, to hold to the use of the master and brethren and their successors, and the majority nominated a person at a corporate meeting to fill the vacancy, and the master refused to put the common seal to the presentation, the Court, on application for a mandamus, compelled him to do so, notwithstanding it was insisted that the master's concurrence in the act of the majority was necessary. (Reg. v. Kendal, clerk, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 366). The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 66, enacts, that every officer of any borough or county who shall be in any office of profit at the time of the passing of the act, whose office shall be abolished, or who shall be removed from his office under the provisions of this act, and not re-appointed, shall be entitled to have an adequate compensation, to be assessed by the council, and paid out of the borough fund, for the salary, fees, and emoluments of the office which he shall so cease to hold, regard being had to the manner of the appointment, his term or interest therein, and all other circumstances of the case. Persons claiming such compensation to deliver a statement of his claim to the town-clerk, or, in the event of the claimant himself being the town-clerk, to the treasurer of the borough, setting forth the amount received by him or his predecessors, during each of the preceding five years before the passing of the act, on account of the salary, fees, emoluments, profits, and perquisites, in respect whereof he shall claim such compensation. If the council of the borough should determine against the claim in whole or in part, the party aggrieved to be at liberty to appeal to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. The following proviso is then inserted:—Provided also, that every such officer who shall be continued in or re-appointed to such office, under the provisions of this act, and who shall be subsequently removed from such office for any cause other than such misconduct as would warrant removal from an office held during good behaviour, shall be entitled to compensation, in like manner as if he had been forthwith removed, under the provisions of this act, and had not been continued in or re-appointed to such office. By sect. 7, the compensation to be granted to be secured by a bond of the corporation, under their common seal. Where the steward of a borough, removed under this act, demanded compensation under this section, (sect. 66), as for an office held for life, and the town-council allowed compensation as for an annual office only, and on appeal to the Lords of the Treasury, they awarded compensation on the former principle. The corporation refused to execute the bond directed to be given by sect. 67, whereupon the Court directed a mandamus to compel them to execute it. (Reg. v. The Mayor of Norwich, 8 Adol. & Ell. 633; see Ex parte Lee, 7 Adol. & Ell. 139; Reg. v. The Mayor of Cambridge, 12 Adol. & Ell. 702; Reg. v. The Mayor of Sandwich, 2 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 895; Reg. v. The Mayor of York, 3 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 550; Reg. v. The Mayor of Newbury, 1 Adol. & Ell. 751).

If a party is clearly entitled to compensation under the statute, and the corporation refuse to grant it, the Court will award a mandamus to compel them to do so, unless the amount awarded would be merely nominal. (Ex parte Lee, 7 Adol. & Ell. 139). So, if upon appeal to the Lords of the Treasury they have awarded compensation, the Court of Queen's Bench will enforce obedience to the order by compelling the corporation to execute a bond for securing its payment, if within the jurisdiction limited to the Lords of the Treasury by the statute. (Reg. v. The Mayor of Bridgewater, 6 Adol. & Ell. 253; Reg. v. The Mayor of Norwich, 3 Q. B. Rep. 285; see Reg. v. The Mayor of Newbury, 1 Q. B. Rep. 751). So a mandamus lies to the corporation to assess compensation, although on appeal to the Lords of the Treasury they had refused to entertain the application, they considering the claimant not entitled to it, the Court being of opinion that the Lords of the Treasury had exceeded their jurisdiction by inquiring into the title of the applicant. (Reg. v. The Mayor of Harwich, 2 Q. B. Rep. 909). So, if a bond be given for the compensation payable by instalments, and the corporation make default, the Court will direct a mandamus to issue in order to compel payment: and if they appear to have no other funds applicable, they will direct that the amount be raised by a borough rate. (Reg. v. Ledgard and Others, 1 Q. B. Rep. 616). Whenever a mandamus is applied for to compel a corporation to pay money, it must be shewn on the face of the writ that the prosecutor has no other remedy. (Reg. v. The Margate Pier Company, 3 B. & Ald. 220).

Where the bailiff and burgesses of a corporation refused the lord of the manor permission to hold the manor courts in the Guildhall, when they had been usually held there, the Court granted a mandamus to compel them. (Reg. v. Ilchester, 2 B. & C. 764; S. C., 4 D. & R. 324; 2 D. & R. 724; Reg. v. Grantham, 2 W. Black. 716; Reg. v. Wigan, 1 Wils. 76). And where a charter declared that the mayor and jurats of an ancient town might hold a court of record for the holding of pleas, but which had been disused for upwards of thirty years, the Court granted a mandamus to compel such court to be held at the instance of an inhabitant of the town, though not a corporation. (Reg. v. Hastings, 1 D. & R. 148; S. C., 5 B. & Ald. 692, n.; Reg. v. The Mayor of Wells, 4 Dow. P. C. 562). So where a charter of 2 Jac. 1 granted to the steward and suitors of a manor, power and authority to hold a court for the purpose (amongst other objects) of hearing and determining pleas of debt, &c.; but there had been a non-user for fifty years, the Court granted a mandamus to compel the holding of such court, notwithstanding the non-user. "It being a court established for the public benefit, the words of permission used in the charter are obligatory: and the right of determining suits like the present cannot be lost by the non-user." Per curiam. (Res v. Havering-atto-Bower, 5 B. & Ald. 692; S. C., 2 D. & R. 176, n.) A non-user for 200 years, and the want of funds to hold it, are no answer to a rule for a mandamus commanding them to hold it. (Res v. Wells, 4 Dowl. P. C. 562).

So the Court will grant a mandamus to a corporate company to compel them to enrol indentures of apprenticeship, and in such case it is sufficient to state generally that those who have served a free burgess, &c., under indentures of apprenticeship, and whose indentures have been enrolled, are entitled to be admitted to their freedom: that A. B. has served, &c., that his indentures ought to have been enrolled on being tendered, &c., and that they were tendered for that purpose, but that the defendants refused to enrol them, &c. (Res v. The Coopers' Company, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 7 T. R. 543). So to the town-clerk to enrol in one of the public books belonging to a corporation. (Res v. Marshall, 2 T. R. 2). If a person is elected to any corporate office, and the officer whose duty it is to administer the oath refuses, the Court will grant a mandamus in order to compel him. (Bagg's case, 11 Co. 93 b).

Thus, where the mayor refused to swear the high-steward of a town, the Court granted a mandamus to compel him. (Baxter's case, Style, 355). So a mandamus was granted to swear in to the office of mayor. (Anon., Style, 299). So a mandamus lies to compel the placing the corporate seal to the certificate of the election of an officer in the corporation, on an affidavit that he had a majority of legal votes. (Res v. York, 4 T. R. 699).

The books of a corporation are in the nature of public books, and may be inspected by a member of the corporation when his interests are at stake.

By 32 Geo. 3, c. 58, s. 4, the mayor, bailiffs, sheriff, town-clerk, or other officer of any corporation, having the custody or power over the records of the same, shall, upon demand of any person, being an officer or member of such corporation, on the payment of one shilling, permit such person on any day or days except Christmas-day, Good Friday, and Sunday, between the hours of nine in the morning and three in the afternoon, to inspect the books and papers wherein the admission or swearing in of the freemen, burgesses, or other members or officers of such corporation shall be entered, and to have copies or minutes of the admission, or the entry of swearing in of any one or more of such freemen, burgesses, or other members or officers, upon payment of sixpence for every one hundred words for writing the same; and if such mayor, bailiff, sheriff, town-clerk, or other officer, shall refuse or deny to any person hereby entitled to demand it, the inspection of such books or papers, or to have copies or minutes thereof as aforesaid, such mayor, bailiff, sheriff, town-clerk, or other officer, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 100*l.*, together with full costs of suit, to him, her, or them who shall inform and sue for the same, within one year after such offence committed, by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's Courts of record at Westminster, wherein no essoin, protection, wager of law, nor more than one imparlance, shall be allowed.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 35, enacts, that the town-clerk shall permit any burgess to inspect the voting papers of any year on payment of one shilling for every search. If the town-clerk refuse to grant inspection the Court will compel him to do so by mandamus. (Res v. Arnold, 4 Adol. & Ell. 657; Res v. The Sheriffs of Chester, 1 Chit. 477). Where a demand and refusal has taken place, (Reg. v. Sealey, 8 Jur. 496), the Court will almost invariably grant a mandamus to inspect and take copies of corporation books, for every member has a right to refer to the books for any matter which concerns himself, and that although the matter in dispute does not relate to the corporation. (Res v. The Hostmen of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 2 Stra. 1223; The Mayor of Southampton v.

Graves, 8 T. R. 592). Where an action was commenced for the breach of a bye-law which restrained persons from exercising trades within the limits of a corporate city unless they became freemen, the Court compelled the corporation to allow the defendant to inspect the bye-law in the corporation books. (Harrison v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 162; The Brewers' Company v. Benson, Barnes, 236; Res v. Hollister, Hardw. Rep. 245; Street v. Brown, 6 Taunt. 302; Baseman v. Phillips, 4 Taunt. 157; Blakey v. Porter, 1 Taunt. 386; Willett v. Sparrow, 6 Taunt. 676). So where a person had been sued in the court of conscience in London, and was taken in execution, for which he brought an action of trespass, the Court granted a rule for the plaintiff to be at liberty to inspect the book of the proceedings so far as related to the cause against himself, on the ground that every man had a right to look into the proceedings to which he was a party. (Wilson v. Rogers, 2 Stra. 1242). So in an action for a malicious prosecution, where it was necessary in order to support the action that the plaintiff should be put in possession of the contents of his examinations before the justices, and of the warrant on which he was apprehended, the Court granted a rule that they might be inspected, and copies taken of the originals produced at the trial. (Welch v. Richards, Barnes, 468; Res v. Smith, 1 Str. 126; see 1 Chit. C. L. 889). The inspection, when granted, is generally confined to the matter in dispute. The rule for inspection may be said to be confined to cases where civil rights are depending, because, by a well-known rule in criminal cases, a person shall never be compelled to furnish evidence against himself. (Tidd, 9th edit., 595). Whether or not a person is entitled to inspect the books of the quarter sessions appears to be a matter of some doubt. (Res v. The Sheriff of Chester, 1 Chit. Rep. 479; per Abbott, C. J., Herbert v. Ashburner, 1 Wils. 297; Res v. Purnell, Id. 240; Peake's Evid., 4th edit., 98; Edwards v. Vesey, Hardw. Rep. 128; Tidd, 6th edit., 625.

 with copious Notes embracing all the Changes in the Law. The whole of the Text is preserved; such of the Annotations of the late J. CHITTY, Esq., as were considered useful, have been retained; and the Four Volumes have received extensive Additions by the following Gentlemen:—
 Vol. I., by JOHN F. HARGRAVE, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn; Vol. II., by GEORGE SWEET, Esq., of the Inner Temple; Vol. III., by RICHARD COUCH, Esq., of the Middle Temple; Vol. IV., by W. N.
 WELSBY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barristers at Law.

WORTHINGTON ON WILLS.—FOURTH EDITION.

One Volume, price 15s. boards,
A GENERAL PRECEDENT for WILLS, with copious Practical Notes. By GEORGE WORTHINGTON, Esq. The Fourth Edition, with considerable Additions and Alterations, bringing all the Decisions on the recent Statute of Wills down to the present time.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. in strong cloth bds.,
BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER.
 The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notices of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner Bere; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the ful-ness of the Marginal Notes.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 6, 1847.

SOME degree of uncertainty hangs about the jurisdiction of equity in reference to the doctrine of specific performance of a contract for the sale of a chattel. The old notion was, that specific performance could only be had of an agreement relating to real estate; but it is well pointed out by Mr. Justice Story, in his treatise on Equity Jurisprudence, that there is no such distinction in regard to that part of the jurisdiction of equity, as that supposed to be founded on the difference between real and personal estate. The true ground for the jurisdiction is, as stated in that work, (vol. 1, p. 24), that in the particular case damages at law may not afford a complete remedy. "Thus," he says, "courts of equity will decree performance of a contract for land, not because of the particular nature of land, but because the damages at law, which must be calculated upon the general value of land, may not be a complete remedy to the purchaser, to whom the land purchased may have a peculiar and special value. So courts of equity will not generally decree performance of a contract for the sale of stock or goods, not because of their personal nature, but because damages at law, calculated on the market price of the stock or goods, are as complete a remedy for the purchaser, as the delivery of a stock of goods contracted for, inasmuch, as with the damages, he may ordinarily purchase the same quantity of the like stock of goods."

The general doctrine, then, is pretty clear and well established, but there is often difficulty in applying it. A contract, for instance, for the sale of common stock, or of goods generally, will not be, it is admitted, specifically performed; but a contract for the sale of stock, where the title to the stock depended on the possession of certain certificates, has been specifically performed. (Doloret v. Rothschild, 1 S. & S. 590). So, in a very recent case, (Duncuff v. Albrecht, 12 Sim. 189), specific performance of a contract for the sale of a certain number of shares in a railway company has been decreed. The reasons given for the decisions in both these cases shew that the Court sought, as the ground of the jurisdiction, the fact, that there was, or might be, in the nature of the thing contracted to be sold, something which distinguished it from other apparently similar objects of sale; something which gave, or might give, to it an intrinsic value not of necessity measurable in damages. "In my opinion," said the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Duncuff v. Albrecht, "there is not any sort of analogy between a quantity of 3l. per Cents., or any other stock of that description, (which is always to be had by any person who chooses to apply for it in the market), and a certain number of railway shares of a particular description, which railway shares are limited in number, and which, as has been observed, are not always to be had in the market." It is, indeed, obvious, that a man can hardly require 3l. per Cent. stock, except as a mode of possessing money; and, therefore, that the loss of it can be compensated by damages; while shares in a particular railway company may be desirable for specific purposes quite distinct from their pecuniary value; and their loss may, therefore, be quite incapable of being compensated in damages. There is also a further distinction, in reference to chattels, the loss of which would, under ordinary circumstances, be capable of being compensated in damages. Thus, where the contract is for the sale of some chattel, the possession of which is deferred to some future time, so that the profit to be derived from the contract, depending on future events, cannot be correctly estimated in damages, specific performance will be enforced. This is the doctrine of Taylor v. Neville, (cited in 1 S. & S. 610), before Lord Hardwicke, where a contract for the sale of a quantity of iron to be delivered at a future time, and by instalments, was enforced; and of Adderly v. Dixon, (1 S. & S. 607), where a contract for the sale of certain debts proved under a commission of bankruptcy, was enforced, because the sale was of uncertain dividends.

That a contract for the sale of a specific chattel, having a peculiar value, resting upon its individuality, will be enforced, is well settled; but in regard to the intermediate class of cases, where a chattel may have a pretium affectionis, without being of so specific a character as to bring it precisely within the Pusey-horn case, and that class of cases, it has not been expressly determined whether the jurisdiction to enforce specific performance exists. Since the cases of Dolores v. Rothschild and Duncuff v. Albracht, it may be thought that wherever the object of sale is such, that either there may by possibility be an uncertainty whether the purchaser can procure another object of the same kind, or that the possession of it may be desirable for other purposes than as a mere equivalent for money, specific performance will lie. But our readers will of course not require to be told that there is nothing more unsafe in English law, than to rely upon a case decided in reference to a specific matter, as an authority for a general principle, unless the general principle is to be found enounced in it in terms.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE 31st GENERAL ORDER IN CHANCERY OF 1845.

A case occurred before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, on the 3rd instant, calculated well to try the efficacy of the 31st General Order in Chancery of the 8th May, 1845. The plaintiff had brought an action against the defendant, and recovered judgment two years ago, with stay of execution during a short period; and during that period, the defendant sold his personal property, and left England. The plaintiff then filed a bill under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to make the judgment a charge upon the defendant's real estate. The question was, whether the Court could, under these circumstances, order the defendant to appear, and, in default, order an appearance to be entered for him, so as to enable the plaintiff to go on and take the bill pro confesso. His Honor took time to consider.

The 31st Order of 1845, requires several things in order to lay a foundation for the jurisdiction of the Court. First, it must appear that the defendant has been within the jurisdiction at some time, not more than two years before subpoena was issued; secondly, that he is beyond the seas, or that, on certain inquiries, he could not be found; and, in either case, it must appear to the Court, on sufficient evidence, that there is just ground to believe that such defendant is gone out of the realm, or otherwise absconded to avoid being served with process, and then the Court may order him to appear on a given day; and, if he does not, may order an appearance to be entered for him.

The material question in such a case as that referred to is, what is evidence to induce the Court to believe that a defendant has gone out of the realm to avoid process. It may be perfectly true, that if the facts are such as to lead to an inference that a defendant had reason to believe that a bill was actually intended to be filed, and these was nothing else in the case, it may not be necessary, to bring a case within the Order, that a bill should have been actually filed before the defendant absconded; because, if the defendant believed that a bill was going to be filed, it would be too much not to impute to him, when one finds him, in fact, absconding, the intention in absconding of evading process. It may certainly be argued, that a man absconding before a bill is filed, must be taken to abscond to avoid the step that is about, in his belief, to be taken, and not some subsequent step; but, as every one knows that the filing of a bill is nothing, except as a preliminary to compelling the defendant to answer it, a man, whose acts shew that he intended to avoid a bill, may well be taken to intend avoiding, not the filing of the bill merely, but his being forced to come in as a defendant. But in the case before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, the facts were quite consistent with the defendant not only having no reason to believe that a bill was going to be filed; but even, if he had so believed, with his having absconded, not for the purpose of avoiding either the bill or the consequential process, but with a totally different object, viz. to avoid himself or his personal estate being affected by the judgment at law.

An action had been brought, and judgment recovered, with stay of execution; in the period of suspension of execution, the defendant absconds. How, can his so absconding (assuming the evidence of his intention to be inferential and not specific) be properly connected with any presumed purpose, except that of avoiding the existing danger, viz. the judgment and its consequences! It would be extremely unnatural to suppose that a man running away, does so, not to avoid the danger that is actually pressing upon him, but some contingent danger, which may never come into existence at all. But more, it is, in such a case as that referred to, scarcely possible to impute to a defendant the belief that a bill would be filed. For to impute to him such a belief, one must impute to him enough of law to know that a bill would be wholly unnecessary, if the judgment at law could be executed. Now, the only thing that could render the judgment unavailable, would be precisely what took place, viz. the defendant's selling his personal estate and absconding. The intention of the defendant to sell his property and to abscond, would therefore, of necessity, precede, and form the foundation of the intention of the plaintiff to file a bill; whereas the plaintiff's argument, in order to bring his case within the 31st Order, must be, that the intention to abscond was founded on a pre-existing expectation of a bill being filed.

The Order under discussion is unquestionably tainted with considerable vagueness. It gives no precise data according to which the Court is to regulate itself; but converts the Court into a sort of jury, and makes the granting or not granting of the order dependent upon the intention of the defendant appearing to the Court upon sufficient evidence. On the weight and effect of evidence, even when the question is to ascertain the occurrence of some positive act, the minds of any two men taken by chance scarcely ever agree. But when that which is to be determined by evidence, is not the existence of a particular fact, or the doing of a positive act, but the existence of a particular motive for the actions of a human being, not manifested outwardly, but to be collected from his actions, it would not be extraordinary that even judges should differ in the inference they draw from facts. To return, however, to the particular case that we have been discussing, we do conceive, that when a judgment at law has been entered up against a man, and he runs away, knowing that if he does not run away, there is no occasion whatever for a bill in equity to be filed against him; it is a strong thing to say, that he runs away, not from the judgment, but from the bill, which is only likely to be filed if he does run away. And we should conclude with reference to the construction of the 31st Order of 1845, generally, that to bring a case within it, it should be shewn either, that a bill was actually filed when the defendant absconded, or that he had specific information of the probability of a bill being intended to be filed; and that, in either case there was no other ground of danger, to which his absconding could be more naturally referred, than to the fear of process in equity.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Notwithstanding the Court is always willing to afford an opportunity to persons seeking information of particular facts contained in corporate or other books of a public nature, it nevertheless will not grant the inspection required, unless the information sought is clearly one affecting the applicant's interest; for the mere fact of a person being a member of the corporation will not give him a right to inspect the corporate books concerning matters having no reference to his rights as a burgess. Thus, where an attorney brought an action against a corporation to recover the amount of his bill for business done, applied for an inspection of the corporation books, so as to enable him to prove his retainer, the Court refused the application for a mandamus. Littledale, J., said, "The plaintiff's claim here has nothing to do with the affairs of the corporation. If the books are required at the trial, notice must be given to produce them." Such applications as the present are granted only in those cases where the opposite party stands in the situation of a trustee for both parties. (Stevens v. The Mayor of Berwick-upon-Tweed, 4 Dowl. P. C. 277). So, where an application was made by some of the freemen and liverymen of the Merchant Tailors' Company for a mandamus to the masters and wardens to allow them to inspect and take copies of all records, books, and muniments in their possession belonging to the said company, or relating to the affairs thereof, on the ground that the attention of the applicants had been called to the state of the affairs of the company, which induced them to suppose that the revenues were improperly employed, through malpractice on the part of those members who had the management of the company's affairs, and setting forth certain instances of misgovernment not affecting the parties themselves, or any question then pending, the Court refused to grant the writ. (R. v. The Merchant Tailors' Company, 2 B. & Adol. 115).

Having considered those cases in which the Court has granted the writ of mandamus to elect, admit, and restore to corporate offices, we will proceed to enunciate some of the principal cases in which it has been refused for the like purpose.

Where a bye-law of a corporation directed, that, upon the happening of any vacancy in the number of twenty-four common councillors, such vacancies should be filled by the freemen inhabiting the town; and that a court should be holden once every year, at which it should be lawful for the bailiffs to admit to the freedom of the town such persons of good fame as had been resident there for one whole year; the Court refused a mandamus to the bailiffs to admit a person to the freedom of the borough, because the bye-law did not give to every such person who had been so resident for that period an absolute right to be admitted. (Res v. Eys, 1 B. & C. 85; 4 B. & Ald. 271; S. C., 2 D. & R. 172). And where a charter authorised the mayor and recorder, or their respective deputies, and the rest of the aldermen of a borough for the time being, or the greater part of them, from time to time and at all times thereafter, as often and when to them it should seem fit and necessary, to nominate, choose, and prefer, so many and such persons to be free burgesses of the borough as they pleased; the Court refused to grant a mandamus to compel the mayor and aldermen to proceed to the election of free burgesses, or to hold a meeting for the purpose of considering the propriety of proceeding to such an election. (Res v. Fossey, 2 B. & C. 584; S. C., 4 D. & R. 132; Res v. The Mayor of Chester, 1 M. & S. 101). Nor will the Court in any instance grant a mandamus to compel a corporation to elect members of an indefinite body. (Ib.) Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to elect another in the place of a non-resident, unless the non-resident has been previously removed. (Res v. Truro, 3 B. & Ald. 590). So in the case of a vacancy of a capital burgess. (Alchester case, 2 Chit. 267). Nor will two writs of cross or concurrent mandamus be granted to go to election in corporations, unless upon some special reason, such as a manifest belief that the first will be improperly executed, or laches in the party first applying. (Res v. Wigan, 2 Burr. 782; 2 Ld. Keny. 584). And where a mandamus was applied for, in order to raise the question against a usage set up, whether the election of officers ought to be annual, the Court refused to grant the writ, there being another remedy open to the parties. (Res v. Chester, 1 M. & S. 101; see Res v. Amery, 2 T. R. 515; 4 T. R. 122; The Corporation of Scarborough, Str. 1180; Foot v. Prouse, Str. 625; and Res v. The Blackwall Railway Company, 9 Dowl. P. C. 558).

Where at an election for a commissioner under a certain local act of Parliament, M. and T. were candidates, and M. was duly elected and sworn in; upon which T. obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to certify his election and swear him in upon an affidavit, stating that he had a majority of votes: the Court, however, on argument, discharged the rule, with costs, on the ground that a mandamus was not the proper remedy, but an information in the nature of a quo warranto against M. (R. v. Beedle, 3 Adol. & Ell. 467).

If the validity of an election is doubtful, and the office is full de facto, the Court will not grant a mandamus to proceed to a new election until after the validity of the first election has been tried upon a quo warranto information. (Case of the Borough of Tintagel, 2 Stra. 1003; Res v. Bankes, 3 Burr. 1453; Req. v. Phippen, 7 Adol. & Ell. 970; Res v. Winchester, Id. 215; Res v. Derby, Id. 419; Res v. Beedle, 3 Adol. & Ell. 467). So, if an application is made to the Court for a mandamus to compel a corporation to proceed to a new election, on the ground of the charter directing that where any of the capital burgesses die, dwell out of the borough, or from some other cause be removed, that the remainder on the happening of any one of such events shall elect others in those offices in which a vacancy has occurred; if the words are at all ambiguous the Court will not interfere until the officer then filling the appointment shall have been removed on a quo warranto information. (Res v. The Mayor of Truro, 3 B. & Ald. 590; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76*).

The Court will not grant a mandamus to the mayor and steward of the borough to admit and enrol an inhabitant at the court leet of the borough to be a free burgess if he fail to make out an inchoate right in every inhabitant to be a burgess. (Res v. Westlooe, 3 B. & C. 677; 2 D. & R. 178; 5 D. & R. 590). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to admit a recorder where there is a recorder de facto, though both claim under the same election, because the party had another remedy by quo warranto. (Res v. Colchester, 2 T. R. 259; but see Res v. York, 4 T. R. 699; Res v. The Bedford Level Corporation, 6 East, 356). Where a corporate body allege that a custom exists of examining and determining whether a person returned as elected to an office was a fit and proper person qualified to fill it, and that they had so examined and found him unfit, the Court will not grant a mandamus to compel them to admit him, such custom being valid in law. (Res v. London, 3 B. & Adol. 255; S. C., 1 Nev. & M. 285). So, a mandamus was refused to admit a person to the office of auditor of the chamberlain's and bridge master's accounts of the city of London, who had served it three years successively, and had been elected again the fourth by the livery, it appearing that by a custom of the city no person should be elected or serve the office for more than two years successively. (Res v. London, 1 T. R. 423; see Res v. The Mayor of Gravesend, 2 B. & C. 602). And where the bye-law of a corporation required that the under steward "or his sufficient deputy" should attend at every court to execute the duties of his office, but no power was given by the charter to appoint a deputy, the Court refused a mandamus to admit the deputy and nominee of the under steward, it not being competent for him to appoint a deputy to discharge generally the ministerial acts of his office. (Res v. Gravesend, 2 B. & C. 602; S. C., 4 D. & R. 117). Query, whether he could have made such an appointment for the discharge of any particular ministerial duty? (See 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 78, s. 24).

* Sect. 52 enacts, that, if any person holding the office of mayor, alderman, or common councillor for any borough, shall be declared bankrupt, or shall apply to take the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, or shall compound by deed with his creditors, or, being mayor, shall be absent for more than two calendar months; or, being an alderman or councillor, for more than six months at one and the same time (unless in case of illness) from the borough of which he shall be mayor, alderman, or councillor, then and in every such case such person shall thereupon immediately become disqualified, and shall cease to hold the office of such mayor, alderman, or councillor as aforesaid, and in the face of such absence shall be liable to the same fine, to be recovered in the same manner as if he had refused to accept the said office; and the council thereupon shall forthwith declare the said office to be void, and shall signify the same by notice in writing, under the hands of three or more of them, countersigned by the town-clerk, to be affixed in some public place within the borough; and the said office shall thereupon become void. It then goes on to provide, that any person ceasing to hold office, on the ground of any of the above disqualifications, may, on their ceasing, or their returning, to reside in the borough, if not otherwise disqualified, be capable of being re-elected.

Reviews.

The Statutes relating to the Ecclesiastical and Eleemosynary Institutions of England, Wales, Ireland, India, and the Colonies, with the Decisions thereon. By ARCHIBALD JOHN STEPHENS, Barrister at Law. Second Edition. 2 vols. royal 8vo. pp. 2410.

[Pariser.]

If we were asked to indicate the branches of the law which stand most in need of being codified, or (to continue the metaphor) pruned and trained, we should point first to those which overshadow our ecclesiastical and charitable institutions. Anything more chaotic cannot be conceived. In that great constellation of nebulae, or murky way—the statutes at large—the enactments upon which Mr. Stephens has based himself are distinguished by peculiar and most refractory nebulousity. The first step towards resolving them, and finding the key to their mutual actions and interferences, is to make an accurate catalogue and an intelligible arrangement of them. This task Mr. Stephens has undertaken, and performed with infinite pains and labour; and he has inserted in the proper places notices of all the observations, which from time to time have been made by authority, and published in the records of the royal observatories or courts. In his own words,

“The object of this publication is to supply the clerical and legal professions with a complete collection of the statutes relating to ecclesiastical and eleemosynary institutions, in a form convenient for reference, and rendered the more useful for that purpose by notes of the decisions upon the various enactments. The statutes have been placed in one chronological series, commencing with the 9 Hen. 3, c. 1, and terminating with the 7 & 8 Vict. c. cviii. When repealed statutes affect existing interests or illustrate the present law, they have been printed at length; under other circumstances, their titles only have been given, with references to the repealing statutes. A suggestion, that the titles of the statutes which apply to Scotland should also be introduced, has been followed; but the Church of Scotland has not otherwise been noticed.”

The chronological arrangement is, on the whole, most useful for reference, and the ready discovery of the various enactments affecting any particular subject of inquiry is provided for by a full and well-arranged index. Of indexes and tables, indeed, the Editor has been very liberal. The heading of one of these has puzzled us. It is a table of “Addenda, Errata et Corrigenda.” Is Mr. Stephens here aiming a dry hit at the “Errata non corrigenda” of the Church?

In the selection of the statutes, and in various mechanical details, Mr. Stephens has exercised considerable tact and care. Every statute which can fairly be deemed within the scope of the work appears to have been inserted. Each enactment is furnished with a reference in the margin to the other enactments on the same subject, if such exist; and occasionally lists are given of the private acts which have been passed for objects connected with the subject in hand.

In his notes, the Editor has confined himself to the beaten track, stating or referring to the authorities and the opinions of text writers, but seldom venturing upon any original description. We think he has too often given admittance to the full proportions of the intolerably tedious and jejune judgments which have been so much in fashion in the Ecclesiastical Courts since, and even (with due respect be it spoken) not unfrequently during, the time of Lord Stowell: not that we would charge all the tautologies and empty sounds which have been chronicled by Phillimore, Haggard, and Curteis, upon the judges; for we regard a large proportion of them as mere acoustical phenomena—reverberations from the bare walls of those melancholy retreats, "where owl hooteth unto owl." Some communications, principally on questions of church discipline, with which the Editor has been favoured by several distinguished prelates, are written in the same style, and perhaps rather encumber than enrich the book.

A Practical Treatise on the Act for the Registration, Regulation, and Incorporation of Joint-stock Companies, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, (as amended by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 78), with Directions for the provisional and complete Registration of Companies. Intended as a Guide to Persons concerned in the Formation and Management of Companies, towards compliance with the Provisions of the Registration Act. To which is added a Precedent of a Deed of Settlement, prepared and settled in conformity with the Provisions of the Act. By GEORGE TAYLOR, Writer to the Signet, Assistant Registrar of Joint-stock Companies. London, 1847. Small 8vo. pp. 458. [Benning.]

A formidable title. We need scarcely remind our readers that the objects of the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, are these—to direct the provisional and complete registration of certain joint-stock companies,—to provide for the registration from time to time of certain particulars of the affairs of such companies,—to provide for the insertion in their deeds of settlements of certain clauses, and to regulate and control in certain particulars the management of their affairs. For these purposes the act contains directions for registration, an enumeration of the particular provisions which must be inserted in the deed of settlement of every company to be completely registered under the act; and enactments, which, independently of any provisions in the deed of settlement, control the conduct of the business of every company constituted by complete registration under the act. The provisions of the act have been conceived and expressed with remarkable foresight and skill, save in a few instances, where, perhaps, the original draughtsman is not to blame. He who can conceive and express his design with clearness is likely to be the best expositor of his own meaning, and until we find a guide better endowed with lucidity of thought and expression (to say nothing of authority) than the framer of the act, we shall consult the original "directions" of the Legislature in preference to any "directions for observing the directions."

As the arrangement of the clauses in the act could scarcely be improved, an index to it is not wanted. The few questions and authorities upon its construction might be dismissed in half-a-dozen pages, and the practice of the registrar in matters which the act leaves to his discretion might be stated in as short a compass. The act occupies about fifty pages; but, condensed as its light is, it can barely be of such surpassing brilliancy as to require to be viewed through the obscure medium of 270 pages of commentary. Mr. Taylor seems to understand his subject,—writes intelligently, and occasionally makes a useful practical remark; but his good things are so hard to come at that they lose half their value. For instance, we have no less than thirty-two pages of talk about the history and policy of the act; twenty more of a discussion of the cases of Young v. Smith, Reynell v. Lewis, Walstab v. Spottiswoode, &c.; and nearly thirty on the legal consequence of complete registration—matters quite beside the subject of the book, which is practice, not law. The book may be useful for occasional reference on doubtful points; but its bulk and diffuseness, and the irrelevant matter with which it is crammed, render it quite unfit to be used as an introduction or guide to the practice of registration. Whoever attempts to make such a use of it will lose his time and his patience, and end where he ought to have begun, with a careful study of the act itself. Even in his selection of a precedent of a deed of settlement, the editor has been unfortunate; instead of being, what such a precedent should be, a form containing all the clauses essential to the constitution of a company under the act, and none other, so as to be capable of being fitted to any particular case by the addition of the special provisions suited to its special circumstances, he has taken a form by no means remarkable for brevity, neatness, or precision, and exclusively applicable to the business of an insurance office. In a note to this form, a hope is expressed "that all needless verbiage or repetition has been successfully avoided." We should like to hear a conveyancer's definition of needful verbiage and repetition.

A Treatise on the Law of Ways, including Highways, Turnpike-roads, and Tolls, Private Rights of Ways, Bridges, and Ferries, with the Law of the Prescription Act 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, and of Railways, so far as they relate to Highways and Turnpike-roads. By HUMPHRY W. WOOLRYCH, of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Second Edition. Small 8vo. pp. 691. [Benning.]

A new and much improved edition of a useful practical work. The multifarious enactments and authorities on the subject of ways, public and private, are here arranged and stated in as convenient and clear a manner as could be desired. Mr. Woolrych collects his materials with unwearied industry, and arranges them with tact. If a case has been decided, or an enactment made upon any point within the scope of his work, it is to be found there in its proper place. We wish we could carry our praise further; but Mr. Woolrych is more happy in collecting authorities than in discussing them when they involve any nice or disputed question of principle. This deficiency is particularly remarkable in the chapter on the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), where the cases which have settled the construction of that difficult statute are stated with tolerable accuracy, it is true, but apparently without any clear understanding, certainly without any clear exposition, of the important general principles decided by them,—a chapter, in short, as opposite as possible in its character to the chapter on the same subject in the profound work of Messrs. Gale and Whatley. For instance, the marked distinction which is observed throughout the act between claims of rights of common and other profits prendre, claims of mere easements, other than access of light, and claims of access of light, each of which class of claims is subjected to peculiar rules, is thus slurred over by our author:—

"In the 2nd section the act speaks more especially of ways and watercourses. The subjects of some sections are rights of common and rights to other profits a prendre, and to the use of light. Other claims re- late generally both to profits and easements."

Tickle v. Brown (4 Adol. & Ell. 369) is cited as the authority for the position that the enjoyment to be proved under the act "must be open and without deceit of any kind, not by stealth, or as an excuse for a trespass." (P. 378). The point decided in Tickle v. Brown was, that the enjoyment must be of right, and not by special permission on each occasion, and accordingly, it was held in that case, that evidence of the payment of ld. a year during part of the period of enjoyment, was improperly rejected at the trial, because such evidence might have shewn that part of the enjoyment had been by permission asked subsequently to the commencement of the period of forty years. In a subsequent page (384) this case is thus mentioned:—

"Nearly akin to this mode of defeat is the payment of a compensation. The defendant who denied the existence of a certain way claimed by the plaintiff, proposed to ask a witness whether ld. a year had not 'been paid by the occupier of the land, in right of which the way was claimed, for the user of the way, and the rejection of this evidence was held to be wrong. If made out, this agreement to pay 1d. annually, would have power to defeat the claim.' We need scarcely say that the question was not as to the effect of the agreement to pay a compensation, but as to the conclusion to be drawn from the fact that the agreement had been entered into after the commencement of the period of forty years. Such an agreement entered into before the commencement of that period would not have defeated the claim.

The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported Cases; the Statutes to the present Time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of the veteran will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. E. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

S. Sweet, 1, Chancery-lane.

TO SOLICITORS.—A Gentleman, having relinquished the Profession, is desirous of parting from an excellent glazed Bookcase, a Time-piece, Tables, and other Furniture, which he will do at a great sacrifice. Apply to Mr. Chapman, 1, Boswell-court, Carey-street.

MARTIN'S CONVEYANCING, by DAVIDSON.

In 5 vols. royal 8vo., price 7*l.* boards.

THE PRACTICE OF CONVEYANCING, with PRECEDENTS and FORMS OF ASSURANCE, and PRACTICAL NOTES, as originated by the late THOMAS MARTIN, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law; and continued and completed by CHARLES DAVIDSON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

The First Volume consists of an Introduction, and of an Appendix (just published) containing several additional Precedents. The Second Volume contains a very large collection made by the late Mr. Martin, of Common Forms of all the different Clauses of Deeds, Wills, and other Assurances: the Forms are drawn from various sources, and present a very considerable choice to the draftsman. The last Three Volumes, and the Appendix to the First, (which are the work of Mr. Davidson), contain entire Precedents of all the Assurances commonly framed by Conveyancers, with a very large body of Notes, principally relating to the practice of preparing Drafts, and to such points of law as bear more immediately on that part of the Conveyancer's duty. It is to this object (the Preparation of Drafts, that the Work has been chiefly directed; and it is conceived, that the precision and uniformity of language in the Precedents, their conciseness, and their having been taken wholly from the most approved Forms, and principally from Drafts recently prepared, must give this book an advantage, for practical purposes, over any collection of Precedents hitherto offered to the Profession.

A. Maxwell & Son, Law Publishers, 32, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

Just published, in 2 vols., royal 8vo., price 2*l.* 10*s.* in boards, PLATT ON LEASES.—A TREATISE on the LAW OF LEASES, with Forms and Precedents. By THOMAS PLATT, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister at Law, Author of "A Practical Treatise on the Law of Covenants."

"Mr. Platt has presented the profession with a full and complete treatise of the whole law and practice relating to leases, accompanied by an ample collection of precedents, and we are glad that the work has fallen into such competent hands, equally in regard to practical experience and professional learning."—Legal Observer.

"The Propositions of Law are clear and precise, well arranged, and supported by full Statements of the Cases and Authorities upon which they are founded. The Appendix of Precedents is excellent. There are Leases and parts of Leases, Clauses, and Powers of Leasing, which seem to supply all of precedent and form which the most varied practice can require."—Daily News.

"This book consists of two large volumes, and is amply entitled to rank as a standard work on the useful and important subject of which it treats."—Law Magazine.

A. Maxwell & Son, Law Publishers, 32, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

MR. Serjeant STEPHEN'S NEW COMMENTARIES on the LAWS OF ENGLAND.

* * The publisher of the above work respectfully recommends possessors of the earlier volumes of the same to complete their sets as soon as possible, to prevent difficulty hereafter in making them up.—October, 1847.

CRABB'S CONCISE PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING.—

THIRD EDITION. 2 thick vols. royal 8vo., price 3*l.* boards. A COMPLETE SERIES of PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING and of COMMON and COMMERCIAL FORMS, in alphabetical order, adapted to the present state of the Law and Practice of Conveyancing, with copious Prefaces, Observations, and Practical Notes on the several Deeds. To which are added the latest Real Property Acts, with Notes, and the Decisions thereon. The Third Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. By GEORGE CRABB, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister, at Law.

* * This Work, which embraces both the Principles and Practice of Conveyancing, contains likewise every description of Instrument wanted for Commercial Purposes.

"Crabb's Precedents are already well known to the Profession. Two Editions have been exhausted in a very short period, a decided proof of the estimation in which they are held, and how useful and satisfactory they have been found in practice. The Third Edition, just published, presents a multitude of improvements, giving to it almost the value of a new work."—Law Times.

MONTAGU and AYRTON'S BANKRUPT LAW.—SECOND EDITION.

With Supplement, in 2 closely printed vols. 8vo., price 2*l.* 6*s.* boards. MONTAGU and AYRTON'S LAW and PRACTICE in BANKRUPTCY, as altered by the RECENT STATUTES, ORDERS, and DECISIONS, containing Forms, Precedents, and Practical Directions in Bankruptcy, with new Tables of Costs, &c. The Second Edition. With a SUPPLEMENT, containing the Statutes 7 & 8 Vict. cc. 96, 70, and 111; and all the Rules, Orders, and Decisions to the present Time. By JOHN HERBERT KOE, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel, and SAMUEL MILLEE, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This extract will satisfy the reader that our praise is not undeserved, and that it is not without cause that we recommend this New Edition of Montagu and Ayrton as the best Practical Work on the Law of Bankruptcy that has ever issued from the Press."—Law Times.

* * The Supplement may be had separately, price 5*s.* boards. Henry Butterworth, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 7, Fleet-street.

Second Edition, revised and enlarged, price 14*s.*

AYCKBOURN'S NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE, as altered by the Orders of 8th May, 1845; with Practical Directions, the Modern Cases, and an Appendix of Forms.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 13, 1847.

It is rumoured that, among the alterations in the law intended to be proposed to Parliament in the ensuing session, is the addition to the county courts of an equitable jurisdiction, within certain limits. As this is a course of proceeding which has been for years advocated in THE JURIST, we shall not stop to express our hope that it will be, at length, carried into effect. But, in proportion to our desire to see an equity jurisdiction for the poor man, is our desire to see its working details well considered before it is established; and, with that view, we shall add our humble contribution of observations on some points which appear to us to offer difficulties.

One material difficulty will be, to assign the limit of the jurisdiction, which is not quite so easy to fix, with a due regard to giving effect to the new jurisdiction, as it was in reference to the recovery of debts or damages. An arbitrary maximum of amount to be recovered, may perfectly well answer the purpose when the only question is debt or damages, and may also, perhaps, answer the purpose in equity, when the litigation is in reference to an ascertained fund; but will obviously be quite inapplicable to a multitude of subjects of equitable jurisdiction. For instance, suppose a suit, the object of which is to restrain infringement of a patent right, or of copyright, either literary, or under the copyright in Designs Act, (and the latter class of cases would probably very often be taken into the county courts, if they had an equitable jurisdiction); it would be very difficult, probably impossible, to subject such cases to any arbitrary limit as to amount; because the object of the suit is not in general to recover money at all, and never to recover an ascertained sum; but is, in general, confined to the prevention of wrongful acts injurious to the plaintiff's interest. In most such cases, indeed, the value of the subject-matter of the litigation is not susceptible of calculation, and the ground of the jurisdiction is, that the plaintiff has a legal right, which he is entitled to have protected, without reference to the amount of damage already sustained by him, and without reference to its actual value in money. Again, the jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of agreements could hardly be conveniently limited by any arbitrary measurement of pecuniary value. Such a limit might be applicable, certainly, where the case is simply an agreement to purchase for a given sum; but if the agreement were for a partnership, or of the class of Hills v. Crole (2 Phil. 52) and Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, (Id. 60), it would be quite out of the question. So, where the agreement is to grant a lease at a rack rent, an agreement quite fitting to be enforced, the value of the subject-matter of litigation would be of course quite unascertainable.

It must also be remembered, that, even with reference to those class of cases where the litigation is touching an ascertained or ascertainable fund, the limit, if a pecuniary limit of jurisdiction is applied at all, ought not to be considered in reference to the fund alone, but ought to take into account the shares into which the fund may be divisible. To limit, for instance, the sum in respect of which an administration suit might be instituted, to 100*l.* or 200*l.*, might appear to give to parties a much larger right of suit in equity in a county court than they have at law, but would really be limiting the right of suit, if the participants were numerous, within a much narrower boundary. On the other hand, to limit the jurisdiction by reference to the sums recoverable by any party, would be open to great objection, because the very essence of such suits is to ascertain unascertained rights, and of course it would be impossible to discover, until the Court was prepared to pronounce a final decree, whether it had jurisdiction or not.

The mode in which the limit of the equity jurisdiction of the county courts must be regulated, will probably be found to depend more upon the inducements held out by rules of practice, and by the nature of the tribunal, to submit a case to their decision, than upon any arbitrary pecuniary, or other limit that could be suggested. There will be little reason to fear, if the scale of costs and fees allowed in taxation is kept down on the principles already applied to the practice of the county courts, that cases of great importance, with reference to the amounts in dispute, should find their way into the county courts; and if the rule were, that, where all parties consenting, any suit might be instituted in a county court, and that subject to power in the Court of Chancery, on a proper application, to remove any suit from the county court to itself, any suit might be instituted in the county court with or without consent, probably the class of cases that would be taken to the county courts would be, with few exceptions, just the class of cases that ought to be taken there.

Another difficulty will be that of adopting the peculiar feature of equity procedure, viz. examining a defendant against himself, so as at the same time to avoid the insupportable oppression of such a procedure if conducted by means of an impromptu vivâ voce examination, and the expense and delay, which are the accompaniments of a proceeding analogous to that by bill and answer. That the procedure should be to some extent in writing, if the county court jurisdiction extends to cases of breach of trust, and to cases generally where discovery is to be obtained from the defendant himself, seems almost unavoidable. Probably, notice in writing to the defendant of the matters on which discovery is required, and a subsequent vivâ voce examination of the defendant, confined strictly to the points put in issue in the written notice, might answer the purpose of obtaining discovery, avoiding at the same time, to a sufficient extent, the mischiefs above alluded to. This will, however, we apprehend, be found the greatest practical difficulty in producing a really economical and at the same time really useful equity jurisdiction.

ON THE ADMISSION OF SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWERS IN EQUITY.

The general rule of practice in equity with reference to answering is well known to be, that a defendant is bound by his answer, and that, if he thinks fit to swear falsely or carelessly, he will not be allowed to contradict his answer by a supplemental one. There are, however, cases of exception to this rule, which it may be convenient to examine, in order to shew on what grounds the Court will depart from its general rule. In Curling v. Marquis Townshend, (19 Ves. 627), Lord Eldon puts the cases of exception upon the ground of fraud only; not even negligence alone. "It would be very difficult," he says, (p. 631), "even upon negligence, unless the party was led into it, to have the records of the court altered." In that case, the defendant having admitted by his answer the principal facts alleged in the bill, denied the truth of some of the material facts in a cross-bill, and in an answer to a supplemental bill, and moved to withdraw replication in the original cause, and for leave to file a supplemental answer. The ground alleged was, that papers by which he could have contradicted the statements of the bill, were withheld from him and his solicitor; that circumstances had since come to his knowledge, on which, had he known them, he would not have put in his answer as he had done; that his solicitor had refused to let it be filed until furnished with papers in the hands of his former solicitor; but, on the plaintiff's assurance that the facts alleged in the bill were true, and threats of a sequestration, he had at length filed his answer in the absence of such papers. These facts, it will be seen, went very near to fraud practised upon the defendant; nevertheless, Lord Eldon held them insufficient to justify the Court in allowing the defendant to put in a supplemental answer contradicting the statements of his original answer. In the case of Greenwood v. Atkinson, in which the principles on which the Court proceeds were very fully discussed, and a variety of cases referred to in the judgment, the defendant had by his answer admitted the possession of documents, and he then applied for leave to file a supplemental answer denying the possession of those documents. The Vice-Chancellor (Sir L. Shadwell) pointed out the distinction, that, in most of the cases where a supplemental answer contradicting the original answer had been filed, the new statement proposed to be made was supported by written documents, so that there could be no doubt of its truth; whereas in the case before him, the object was to withdraw documents which he had admitted to be in his possession. There were other things in the case, besides, which went strongly against giving the defendant the indulgence asked; in particular, that he was an attorney, and that the case alleged against him was such as to put him on his guard against making admissions, of the importance of which he must be taken to be well aware. "I could not," says the Vice-Chancellor in concluding his judgment, "establish a more dangerous precedent than by allowing this defendant to put in a few answers, and thereby to vary the case now on the record, which is beneficial to the plaintiff. The safety of mankind requires that I should refuse this application, with costs."

A material question upon these applications will always be, whether the correction of the original answer is in favour or against the plaintiff. Of course, where the case proposed to be made by the supplemental answer is against the interest of the defendant, there is an additional guarantee of the truth of the statement, and reason to believe that the anxiety to correct the former statement, can have no other motive than a proper anxiety in the defendant to relieve himself from the guilt and consequences of having made a false statement on oath. Accordingly, in Strang v. Collins, (2 Ves. & B. 163), a supplemental answer was permitted, to state that the defendant had obtained administration to his father, a fact which the original answer had denied. In this case there were both the ingredients adverted to: viz. the admission of the defendant, by his supplemental answer, bettered the plaintiff's case; and its truth was demonstrable by production of the letters of administration. To the same effect is Edwards v. Macleay, (1 Ves. & B. 256).

In some recent cases, however, leave has been given to put in a supplemental answer contradicting the original one, where the new statement was neither supported by documentary evidence, nor against the interest of the defendant. In Bell v. Dummore, (7 Beav. 283), the defendant admitted that certain transactions alleged in the bill to have taken place, had taken place in 1827. He afterwards moved for leave to file a supplemental answer, for the purpose of stating that such transactions had not taken place in 1827, but in 1828, and leave was given. Lord Langdale said, that, in such cases, the object of the Court is to allow neither party to obtain a victory at the expense of truth; and that the defendant must show that the fact alleged to be erroneous is material; that the error arose under such circumstances as not to fix him with the first statement, and he must show the terms in which he proposes to introduce the new allegation. It will be observed, that though, as above stated, there was not in this case the circumstance that the truth of the new fact was capable of demonstration by the production of documents, yet there was an approximation to documentary evidence of its truth, because it appeared that there were books and documents, which would of course be produced in the cause, the entries in which were sworn to show the truth of the new statement; so that the substitution of the new for the old statement did not rest simply on the oath of the defendant. In Fulton v. Gilmore, (8 Beav. 154), a similar application was granted. In that case the defendant sought to correct a statement made as to the date of his discharge in India, under the East India Insolvent Act: the correction was completely against the interest of the plaintiff, because, by the East India Act in force in the year 1835, the date stated in the original answer, the discharge of the defendant would not have exonerated him from the plaintiff's demand; whereas by the act in force in 1836, the date stated in the proposed supplemental answer, the defendant's discharge under the act operated as a release from his liability to the plaintiff. It was, on the other hand, sworn in support of the application, that at the date of the original answer the defendant had not his discharge to refer to, and was not aware of the date until long after. In this case also it was clear that the truth of the second answer could be established as in Mayo v. Collins and Edwards v. Macleay, by documentary evidence, as the discharge was the result of a judicial order, which could of course be proved. So, in Swallow v. Day, (7 Coll. 133), a correction of the original answer was permitted, where the defendant, in support of his application, swore that on the very evening of the day on which he had sworn his answer, he discovered, by reference to his books, that he had introduced an incorrect statement, and that he applied the following day to the clerk of records and writs to be permitted to amend his answer.

It is not easy to extract from the authorities any positive rule as to when a supplemental answer contradicting the original answer will be allowed. But it may be gathered from them with tolerable certainty when it will not be allowed.

The rule appears to be rather one of evidence than of mere pleading, and to be governed by the consideration whether the balance of probability is in favour of the truth of the original or of the supplemental statement.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.—Nov. 9.

The Court will sit and take cases in error from the Queen's Bench on the Friday and Saturday after term; cases in error from the Common Pleas on Monday and Tuesday in the following week; and cases in error from the Exchequer on the Wednesday and Thursday following; and on Friday and Saturday following cases which may remain undisposed of from either of the courts.

NEW COUNTY COURTS.—The Gazette of last night (Friday) contains the following notice:—"That, after the expiration of one calendar month from the date of the publication of this notice in the London Gazette, her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, will take into consideration the propriety of making an order, under the provisions of the said act, for paying the judges, clerks, bailiffs, and officers of the said courts by salaries instead of fees, or in such other manner as may be deemed expedient."

ON THE RECOVERY OF DEPOSITS BY SUBSCRIBERS TO AN ABORTIVE RAILWAY SCHEME.

There was a case of considerable importance on the subject of the relative rights and liabilities of directors and shareholders in companies requiring the authority of Parliament, decided in the Court of Exchequer last week. We allude to the case of Garwood v. Ede, (11 Jur. 912), in which the effect of executing the subscribers' agreement underwent a discussion and consideration it had not previously received. At the trial, before Pollock, C. B., it appeared that the action was brought against the defendant as one of the provisional directors of a company provisionally registered, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and called "The Direct Western Railway Company," to recover a sum of 52*l.* 10*s.*, the amount of a deposit paid by the plaintiff, on the allotment to him of twenty shares in the undertaking. The plaintiff had received from the directors of the undertaking scrip certificates for his shares; and had executed the deed called "the subscribers' agreement," by which certain powers were given to the directors. Amongst others, they were to have "full power, in their absolute discretion, and at such times and in such manner as they should think fit, to carry the undertaking, or any part thereof, into effect, with any such variations, alterations, modifications, and extensions, as were thereby authorised, and to abandon the whole or any part of the said undertaking;" also, "full power out of the money which should come to their hands, or be placed to their credit, by way of deposit, on payment of calls, or otherwise, in relation to the said undertaking, to make such deposits or investments as might be required by the standing orders of Parliament; and also to pay and allow all such fees, salaries, commission, and recompense to servants and other persons who might be employed by them &c., as they should think right; and generally to apply such monies in and towards the fulfilment and enforcement of any bargains, engagements, contracts, arrangements, resolutions, or agreements into which they might have entered, or into which they were by that deed empowered to, and should or might enter for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, &c.; and towards the costs of any works or proceedings connected therewith, and in or towards the soliciting, supporting, or opposing certain bill or bills in Parliament, and in obtaining the necessary act or acts for carrying out the aforesaid undertaking, or any part or parts thereof, or in bringing the merits of the said undertaking, or any part thereof, before Parliament as a project; and generally in paying and satisfying all other costs, charges, and expenses, or liabilities, which they, or any or either of them, might sustain or incur, or which might have been already sustained or incurred, in relation to the said undertaking or otherwise, in pursuance of, or by virtue of, or consistently with, those presents, or in the execution or enforcement of the agreements, provisions, and stipulations therein contained, or any or either of them." The scheme proving abortive, as was admitted, without fraud on the part of the directors, the company was dissolved under the provisions of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 23.

The result of the authorities up to this time appearing to be, that, in a scheme for the formation of a company such as this, which scheme has proved abortive, that is, has not reached the point of incorporation by act of Parliament, there is no partnership existing either quoad strangers, or inter se, and, therefore, that the subscribers or allottees are not liable for debts incurred to strangers in the name of the company, where they have not expressly authorised the directors to proceed with the incomplete subscription or capital, or held themselves out as personally responsible, (Bisset on Partnership and Joint-stock Companies, p. 254), the question here was, whether the execution of the subscribers' agreement, containing the clauses above recited, was such an express authority. The counsel for the plaintiff contended, that the deed executed between the directors and shareholders did not render them partners, and that the general power given to the former of dealing with the money of the company must be understood as limited to that portion deposited for the general purposes of the undertaking, and could not be extended to the sum paid to them for the specific purpose of satisfying the standing orders of Parliament; and he referred to the case of Walstab v. Spottiswoode, (15 Mees. & W. 501; 10 Jur. 498). The Court, however, held, that, under such circumstances, the shareholder could not recover his deposit; Pollock, C. B., observing, "The principal difference between the case of Walstab v. Spottiswoode and the present is, that there the purpose for which the money was paid had failed; here the defendant has performed the contract into which he entered, namely, to deliver scrip on the receipt of the deposit-money. Then the parties enter into a new contract by deed, by which they all embark in a common adventure; whereas in Walstab v. Spottiswoode the plaintiff was never jointly interested with the defendants in any thing."

It does not seem quite correct to say, that the principal difference between the case of Walstab v. Spottiswoode and the present is, that there the purpose for which the money was paid had failed. For certainly here, also, the purpose for which the money was paid failed. In both cases the scheme proved abortive in consequence of the requisite capital not having been raised. And in Walstab v. Spottiswoode, as well as in the more recent case, the subscribers' agreement (for aught that appears to the contrary) contained the provisions for the abandonment of the scheme, and the application of the deposits in payment of expenses. In Walstab v. Spottiswoode, Pollock, C. B., observed:—"It appears to us, that the application for shares and payment of the deposit amount to nothing, if the shares subscribed for are so few that the concern cannot proceed, and the scheme must necessarily be abortive." Now, in Walstab v. Spottiswoode, those two acts, the application for shares, and payment of the deposit, were all. There was no receipt of scrip, no execution of any deed. But, in the present case, besides the application for shares and payment of the deposit, there was the receipt of scrip certificates, and the execution of "the subscribers' agreement," by which the plaintiff, under his hand and seal, bound himself to acquiesce in any determination the directors might come to "to carry the undertaking, or any part thereof, into effect, or to abandon the whole or any part of the same;" and likewise to acquiesce in whatever payments the directors might think fit to make "out of the money which should come to their hands, or be placed to their credit, by way of deposit, on payment of calls or otherwise." Unless such an agreement can be shewn to be illegal, or nothing but waste paper or parchment, it is difficult to see how any one executing it could evade its provisions, and recover the whole of his deposit, without reference to what portion of such deposit might or might not have been expended. But the same agreement was to have been entered into by the plaintiff in Walstab v. Spottiswoode, and though she did not actually execute the deed, yet the Court of Exchequer seems to have considered that the terms of it were part of the contract between the parties, observing:—"We think it clear, beyond all doubt, that the amount paid in order to be deposited in pursuance of any standing orders, must be returned to the plaintiff. There is no foundation whatever for a claim to retain this, which was paid for a specific purpose, and the concern abandoned before the money could be applied for that specific purpose." In regard to this distinction between the two portions of the deposit, which was urged by the counsel for the plaintiff in Garwood v. Ede, Parke, B., observed:—"Suppose the agreement in this case had been, that the directors should receive the deposit of 10*l.* per cent., in order that it should be paid in under the standing orders of Parliament; but that, in the event of that becoming unnecessary, they were to have the option to pay any other expenses out of it, there would be nothing illegal in such an agreement. Now, the words of the parties in this deed very nearly amount to that; for the directors are empowered to go on with the undertaking, or any part of it, and to employ the money which may come to their hands 'in paying and satisfying all costs, charges, and expenses, or liabilities which they sustain or incur in relation to the said undertaking, or otherwise, in pursuance of, or by virtue of, or consistently with, those presents, or in the execution or enforcement of the agreements, provisions, and stipulations therein contained, or any or either of them.' If, therefore, the undertaking went on, the money paid by the shareholders was to be deposited in the manner specified; but, if it failed, the directors were empowered to dispose of it in carrying out the other preliminary proceedings; and, I suppose they say, it was absorbed by them. There was never, therefore, a time when there was any money received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff; and the nonsuit was therefore right."

The point as to the legality of an agreement bearing the construction adopted by the Court, may be thought to have deserved more attention than it received. The 23rd section of the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, distinctly forbids the promoters of any company not completely registered to receive more than 10*s.* in the 100*l.*, except in the case of a company for executing a railway, &c., when they are permitted to receive also such further deposit as may be required by the standing orders of either house of Parliament. To any ordinary capacity, it would seem to be obvious, that such further deposit can only be received for and be applied to the specific purpose for which it is authorised to be received, and that any agreement that it may, before it has been applied for that purpose, and regularly withdrawn, pursuant to the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 117, be applied to any other purpose, must be illegal. To authorise such an agreement would certainly let in all the mischief which the enactment in question was intended to prevent.

However this may be, and whether this decision is to be considered as consistent with the statute and with Walstab v. Spottiswoode or not, it does not seem by any means to set the question between the parties at rest, at least, in equity. The learned judge says:—"I suppose the directors say, the money was absorbed by the other preliminary proceedings." But would it not seem that the subscribers should have some power of calling on the directors for an account of the mode in which their money has been expended, and of the balance (if any) in their hands? Might it not still be contended, that there exists a sort of quasi partnership in this stage of the proceedings under which the subscribers should have the right to call upon the directors for an account? There is no question, that not very long ago, some very learned persons considered a subscription contract or subscribers' agreement equivalent to a deed of partnership, and, therefore, constituting a partnership among those subscribing it. The framers of the act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, in the 9th section of that statute, appear to use "deeds of partnership" and "subscription contracts" as convertible terms.

Another very important point which will probably have to be determined shortly is, whether parties who have paid their deposit and received their scrip, undertaking then to execute the subscribers' agreement, but not having executed it, will, in equity, be considered as having executed it.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

The Court will not grant a mandamus to restore a person to a corporate office, where it is admitted he has been rightly removed, though he has had no previous notice, (Res v. Usbridge, Cowp. 523; Res v. Liverpool, 2 Burr. 734), and although the return made to the writ may be objectionable or defective in point of form, if the facts stated on the return justify the Court in refusing the writ as a matter of discretion: thus, they would not compel a corporation to restore an officer whom they would be bound immediately to remove in a more formal manner. (Res v. Bristol, 1 D. & R. 389; S. C., nom. Res v. Griffiths, 5 B. & Ald. 731; and see Res v. The Bank of England, 2 B. & Ald. 620; Res v. London, 2 T. R. 177). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to restore where the party is not actually ousted, but still remains an officer, though not allowed to act, his remedy would be for a mandamus to permit him to exercise his rights in respect of the particular office, even though another person may be elected to the office in his stead. (Res v. The Mayor of Oxford, 6 Adol. & Ell. 349). Where a corporator, entitled to divide a certain share of the profits of a fishery, which the corporators worked and enjoyed in partnership, was suspended from the perception of his profits until he paid a fine imposed by a bye-law, with the breach of which he was charged, the Court refused a mandamus to restore him to his office; he being still an officer, and having a remedy by an action for the tort against any person who disturbed him in the lawful perception of his profits, if the bye-law were illegal, or if not guilty of a breach of it, besides having a remedy in equity for his share of the partnership funds. (Res v. The Whitstable Free Fishers' Company, 7 East, 363; S. C., 17 Ves. 315; see Res v. The Bank of England, 2 B. & Ald. 620; see Res v. London, 2 T. R. 177, where the Court seemed to doubt whether a mandamus might not go to restore an officer to the exercise of his functions, if it appeared he was suspended without just cause. Res v. The Mayor of Oxford, 6 Adol. & Ell. 349). It seems a mandamus would not lie to restore to the place of alderman, if it appeared the applicant had left his residence in the city, for which he was chosen an alderman, and that his absence had been productive of inconvenience. (The City of Exeter v. Glide, 4 Mod. 33; Holt, 435; S. C., 1 Shower, 258, 365; Res v. Ponsoby, 1 Ves. sen. 1). And see Res v. Portsmouth, (3 B. & C. 152; S. C., 4 D. & R. 767), where it was held, that an alderman need not reside within the borough, unless it be necessary to the discharge of the duties of his office, or the charter require it; but a quo warranto will not lie to shew cause why an alderman exercises his office, unless removed by the corporation of which he is a member. (Res v. Heaven, 2 T. R. 772). The Court will not grant a mandamus to the mayor of a corporation to hold a court leet for the purpose of administering the oath of allegiance to an inhabitant desirous of taking it. (Res v. Maidstone, 6 D. & R. 334). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to the mayor commanding him to give the key of the town-hall to the lord of the manor to hold his court leet there, although the leet had usually been holden in that place; (Res v. The Mayor of Wigan, 1 Wils. 76; Res v. The Bailiffs of Ilchester, 2 B. & C. 764); nor to the mayor and aldermen of a borough, requiring them to assemble for the purpose of considering the propriety of removing non-resident members of their body, unless, perhaps, where some serious injury or inconvenience to the inhabitants had arisen from non-residence, for an alderman is not bound to reside within the borough, unless it is necessary to discharge the duties of his office, or the charter require it. (Res v. Portsmouth, 3

B. & C. 152; S. C., 4 D. & R. 767; S. P., Res v. Tenness, 5 D. & R. 481; and see Res v. Looe, 5 D. & R. 414). Where judgment has been given on an information in the nature of a quo warranto, for a usurpation, the Court will not grant a mandamus to swear him in without a new election. (Res v. Hearle, 1 Stra. 625).

This writ lies to the lord and steward of a manor to compel an admission to a copyhold. Thus, if the lord of a manor refuse to admit a person to whom a copyhold is surrendered, on account of a disagreement respecting the fine to be paid, the Court will grant a mandamus to compel him, because the lord is not entitled to the fine till admittance. (Res v. Hudson, 2 T. R. 484). So, the writ will be granted to admit a devisee, or even an heir, or the appointee of an unadmitted surrenderee, under a power. (Res v. Brewers' Company, 3 B. & C. 172; S. C., 4 D. & R. 492, overruling Res v. Rennet, 2 T. R. 198; Res v. Oundle, 1 Adol. & Ell. 283; see Res v. Wilson, 10 B. & C. 80). A bill in equity may be filed to compel admittance; and that appears to have been originally the only remedy, but ultimately courts of law assumed a jurisdiction, and now almost exclusively exercise it, though it seems to have been doubted whether they had power to do so. (1 Mad. Ch. Pract. 253, 254; Moor v. Huntingdon, Nels. 12; Co. Copyh. s. 39; Cro. Jac. 368; 1 Roll. 108). In the case of a Crown manor, a bill in equity is the only remedy, or a petition of right; or monstrans de droit. (Reg. v. Richmond, 10 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 148; S. C., 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 352). Where a right is sought to be established against the Crown itself, the course prescribed by the common law is to address a petition to the sovereign, praying that the claim of the petitioner, or, as he is usually called, the suppliant, may be examined. As the prayer of this petition is grantable ex debito justitiæ, it is called a petition of right, and is in the nature of an action against the King, (4 Co. Rep. 58a), by which all demands against the Crown, real, personal, or mixed, may be recovered; (Mann's Exch. Pract., 2nd ed., p. 84); and a petition of right lies for unliquidated damages, (p. 22, E. 3, fol. 5), which was a proceeding to recover damages for an injury done to the suppliant's mills by the King's servants at Nottingham Castle, diverting the course of the river Trent). It seems the rule for a mandamus must call upon the lord and steward jointly. (Reg. v. Whichford, 8 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 251; S. C., 1 Ad. & E., N. S., 355; 7 Dowl. P. C. 709; Res v. Oundle, 3 Nev. & M. 484; S. C., 1 Ad. & E. 283; 3 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 117; 1 Scriv. on Copyh., 3rd edit., p. 624). And where a party claiming to be admitted had but a prima facie title as heir of a trustee, the Court granted a mandamus to compel admission, to enable him to try his right, though equity had before refused to compel the lord to admit him for want of shewing an equitable right to the property. If there be a claim of a previous fine due in respect of the ancestor from whom the party claims, the rule will only be granted on payment of such fine so due. (Res v. Coggan, 6 T. R. 431; Williams v. Lonsdale, 3 Ves. jun. 752; Res v. The Duke of Leeds, 6 East, 432, n. a). Coparceners are entitled to be admitted as one heir, upon the payment of one set of fees; if the steward refuse admission, the Court will direct a mandamus to compel it. (Res v. Bonsall, 3 B. & C. 173). Where a tenant in fees surrendered certain copyholds to the use of his wife, and devised them to certain persons for life, remainder to his own right heirs; the devisees having disclaimed, the Court granted a mandamus to compel the lord to admit the heir of the tenant. (Res v. Wilson, 10 B. & C. 80). It seems a tenant need not tender himself for admission, if he have been refused admission by the steward out of court. (Doe d. Burrell v. Bellamy, 2 M. & S. 87). No action lies against the lord for refusing to admit. (Res v. Coggan, 6 East, 431; 1 Mad.

Ch. Prac. 254). The Court would probably compel the lord to pay the costs of the application under the recent act, if he were to refuse perversely admittance after a formal and proper request. (1 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 8).

Where it appeared the tenants of a manor had a right to become burgesses, the Court granted a mandamus to the steward of the manor and to the homage to hold a court, and present certain conveyances to purchasers of burghage tenements, whereby they were entitled to be sworn in burgesses of the corporation and to vote for members of Parliament. (Rees v. Midhurst, 1 Wils. 283). So, a mandamus lies to the lord and steward of a manor to hold a court, and accept a surrender of a copyhold piece of land from a man and his wife, to admit a purchaser to whom they had surrendered, although a custom was alleged within the manor, that persons not being customary tenants within the manor, taking an interest as purchaser by surrender or otherwise, should pay such fine as the lord should agree to receive, usually assessed at two years' value; but persons already being customary tenants or residents should pay a smaller fine, and that the purchaser had purchased the equity of redemption of another estate of considerable value, and before admittance purchased the land in question to avoid the payment of a larger fine, when applying to be admitted to the larger estate. (Rees v. Boughey, 1 B. & C. 565). So, a mandamus lies to the lord of a manor to hold a court leet for the purpose of appointing a high constable. (Rees v. Melverton, 3 Adol. & Ell. 284).

BANKRUPTS.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 20, 1847.

THE right of a shopkeeper to insist upon the departure of a customer from his shop has lately been discussed in county courts and public meetings. The circumstances which gave rise to the discussion will probably be brought before Parliament; and as the general question, without reference to the facts of any particular case, presents some points of practical importance, we have selected it for the subject of a few remarks.

The position of a shopkeeper we take to be this. By opening his shop he enters into an implied contract with the public, that he will sell to such persons as may be willing to buy his wares at his prices; and that, as an incident to this contract, and for the purpose of carrying it into effect, he gives a license to the public to enter his shop. If he refuse to sell, an action ex contractu may, perhaps, be sustainable against him; it certainly may, if a purchase has been made, and he refuse to deliver the goods: but we propose, first, to consider how far he is justified in expelling a person from his shop who has entered to buy, but has not yet made a purchase? Suppose an action were brought against him for the expulsion, he would plead that the plaintiff was a trespasser in his shop, the plaintiff would reply, leave and license, to which defendant would rejoin, a revocation thereof.

This would raise the whole question. It seems clear, that the public can rely upon nothing but a mere license for their entry, that is to say, a permission making that lawful which otherwise would be unlawful. (See Thomas v. Sorrell, Vaugh. 361). There is neither grant nor interest coupled with such license, which thereof may be revoked, as a mere license is from its very nature revocable. (See Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 Mee. & W. 38; 9 Jur. 187).

Wood v. Leadbitter confirmed the case in the Year Books, that "If one gives me a license to enter his house, and I enter it, if he afterwards revokes such license, I must leave," to which is added, "unless the weather be tempestuous, (nisi fuerit tempore tempestatis), for then I may remain." (Bro. Abr. "Licensee," pl. 9, 15). It would appear to be immaterial whether the license be given to one or many, to the public or to an individual member, for it is still a license unconnected with grants or interests, and on that account essentially revocable. Express notice is sufficient revocation, (Wood v. Leadbitter), and, therefore, a request by the shopkeeper to any person to quit his shop would be sufficient to put an end to the implied license, and to justify the shopkeeper in expelling any who refused to comply with such request.

It should be observed, this license is given by the party, and not, as in the case of innkeepers, by the law. This distinction, taken in The Six Carpenters' case, (3 Rep. 146, a.; Smith's Leading Cases, 62), was applied in Datcham v. Bond, (3 Camp. 524). There, to an action of trespass for entering a dwelling-house, the defendant pleaded license; it appeared that the plaintiff kept billiard-rooms, into which defendant entered, and in which he insisted on remaining, though all the rooms were engaged, and he struck the plaintiff, who endeavoured to eject him; it was held by Lord Ellenborough, that the defendant could not be made by his subsequent conduct a trespasser ab initio, without a new assignment. "The keeping of a billiard table," said the learned judge, "amounts to a license given by the party. The distinction is taken in The Six Carpenters' case, between a license given by the party and a license given by the law. If defendant exceeds the latter, as by committing a trespass in an inn, he is a trespasser ab initio, but excess of the former must be taken advantage of by new assignment." Now, according to the maxim, "Eodem modo quo oritur, eodem modo absolvitur," a license given by a party may be revoked by the act of that party, while a license conferred by the law can be taken away only by the law. The distinctions which exist in other respects between a shopkeeper and an innkeeper are obvious; an innkeeper, by the common law and custom of the realm, is bound to receive and entertain guests on all days and at any hour, and has peculiar rights and liabilities arising from the necessity of the case. So, it has been held, that farriers, who open shops by the road side and profess to physic and shoe horses, are bound to exercise their craft in favour of all who pass along the road, on being tendered the customary hire. (Jackson v. Rogers, 2 Show. 327, 332). Their liability is put on the same ground as that of innkeepers and common carriers for the sake of travellers.

There is one case in which Mr. Baron Parke threw out an opinion bearing directly on the subject which we are considering. The case is Timothy v. Simpson, (1 C., M., & R. 757), in which it appeared that plaintiff passing a shop, and seeing an article ticketed at a certain price, entered and demanded it at that price; he was not, however, permitted to have it. Upon using harsh terms, he was desired to leave the shop; and with reference to this part of the case, Parke, B., said, "The plaintiff appears to have been, in the first instance, a trespasser, by refusing to quit the shop when requested." The decision, however, proceeded on other grounds. In Kirkman v. Shawcross, (6 T. R. 14), it was held, that the dyers and bleachers of Manchester were justified in refusing to dye or bleach goods, except on condition that they should have a lien upon them or their general balance; and it was said by Lord Kenyon, "The case of innkeepers is widely different from the present, for they are bound by law to receive guests who come to their inns. . . . As they cannot refuse to receive guests, so neither can they impose unreasonable terms on them."

Questions may arise connected with this subject, such as, assuming that a shopkeeper can generally insist upon a party leaving his shop, can he do so after that party has made a purchase and before the article purchased has been delivered to him? It would appear not, as the license then becomes coupled with an interest. The circumstances bring it within Wood v. Manley, (11 Adol. & Ell. 34), where it was held, that a license to remove hay, which had been sold to the licensee, was irrevocable.

Another point which suggests itself is, whether if an article be ticketed at a certain price, and a person enter and offer that sum, there is not an acceptance of the implied offer made by the shopkeeper, and a valid contract of purchase and sale formed, provided the article be not of such value as to come within the Statute of Frauds? To this we should answer in the affirmative, as there appear to be an offer and an acceptance thereof in its terms. It then resembles the numerous cases in which it has been decided that a general offer, as the promise of a reward for the apprehension of offenders, becomes special to a party, on his performing the condition.

ON THE RIGHT OF A MORTGAGEE TO PROCEED ON HIS PERSONAL REMEDY AFTER FORECLOSURE.

A case has lately been decided at the Rolls, (Lochhart v. Hardy, 9 Beav. 349), from which two things are to be gathered: firstly, that what was generally thought since Perry v. Barker (8 Ves. 527 a, and 10 Ves. 198) to be clear, was not clear; secondly, that the doctrine of Perry v. Barker is now clear law. Our learned readers will, no doubt, at once recollect the doctrine to which we allude, viz. that, if a mortgagee, having a personal remedy as well as the land, forecloses, and afterwards sells the land for less than the mortgage debt, he may still proceed on his personal remedy, subject to this, that he thereby opens the foreclosure; and the consequence is, that, as he must wholly open it, he must shew that he is in a position to restore the land to the mortgagor. If he can do that, then he may proceed on his personal remedy; if he cannot, he will not be allowed to do so. This was the doctrine of an early case, (Dashwood v. Blythway, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 317), which, singularly enough, was not cited in Lochhart v. Hardy. The report in that case is as follows:—"If a mortgagee has a decree of foreclosure, though that decree be signed and inrolled, yet, if he afterwards brings an action of debt on the bond given at the same time for payment of the money and performance of the covenants in the mortgage deed, such action opens again the foreclosure, and lets in the equity of redemption of the mortgagor." If this was law, the inevitable consequence of it was, that a mortgagee could not proceed on his bond, unless he was in a position to reconvey; because, of course, to say that he opened the foreclosure, and let in the mortgagor to redeem, would be absurd, unless he could perform his part in the redemption, viz. reconveyance. Lord Eldon's opinion, in Perry v. Barker, (8 Ves. 527 a), is strongly to the same effect. "Mr. Madocks," said his Lordship, referring to the argument in Tooke v. Hartley, (2 Bro. C. C. 125), "who knew the practice of the court, will feel great difficulty in contending broadly, that the mortgagee might sell the estate after foreclosure, and then proceed upon the bond, and was driven to the admission, that the foreclosure was opened under those circumstances; at the same time stating, not very consistently, that the action might be brought for the remainder." His Lordship proceeded to comment on Tooke v. Hartley, on the assumption that, in that case, the estate was in the possession of the mortgagee, observing that what was required by justice as to the reconveyance might in that case be done. "But, continued he, "when it is sold to a stranger, that cannot be. The power of reconveyance is gone, and the mortgagee cannot have the right if it is to be considered opened." The circumstance that Lord Eldon, in Perry v. Barker, granted an injunction, does not, in any degree, destroy the weight of his opinion; because granting the injunction, so far as it amounted to a decision, was against the right of the mortgagee to proceed on his personal remedy. In truth, however, in such cases, granting an injunction decides nothing, except that the case shall not go on at law, till equity has inquired whether it ought so to go on. At the hearing of Perry v. Barker, (13 Ves. 198), the point was expressly decided, and consistently with Dashwood v. Blythway; since a perpetual injunction was decreed against the proceeding of the mortgagee on his personal remedy, on the ground that there was no possibility of his obtaining back the estate to reconvey it. Against this stream of authorities there is nothing but the single dictum of Lord Thurlow, in Tooke v. Hartley; so that if the learned judge had been reminded, in Lockhart v. Hardy, of the case of Dashwood v. Blythway, it is probable that he would not have expressed so strong an opinion as he did of the doubt cast upon the question by the conflict between Tooke v. Hartley and Perry v. Barker. It is perhaps, however, better that his Lordship should have been under that impression, as the result is, that he has decided the case upon broad principles of equity, and has so settled the doctrine, that we trust there will henceforth be no attempt to shake it.

BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Viet., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a successful result to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embracing every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no copious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the cases in detail, and superadding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Notes.

Just published, in 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 26s. boards,
A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with the subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By BERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), with changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of some practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but it includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rule of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times Oct 29th, 1846.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work with which no Common Law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupillage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 560, 766.

"The work which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1837) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessor; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think that in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

Price 1s. 6d. sewed.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 27, 1847.

GREAT complaints have been made of late of the practice, very frequent, it must be admitted, of sending causes at Nisi Prius to a reference, after all the expense of preparing for trial has been incurred, briefs delivered, and witnesses, and all the rest of the machinery of the litigation taken down to trial. And upon this theme some eloquent invectives have been poured forth, aimed, of course, principally against the Bar, who are supposed to be able to control every thing and every body, the judges, the attorneys, the juries, and the very forms of proceeding themselves. It is said, that when causes are called on, the counsel, if they see the least appearance of an account in the case, hint at a reference; that the judge, too ready to get rid of a tedious cause, takes up the hint, and that in spite of the attorney and in spite of the suitor, the reckless and irresistible Bar and the facile judge, play into each other's hands, and contriving, as equity has it, how they shall defeat the poor litigants, throw over both suitor and attorney, and condemn them to the tedium and expense of a reference. That a reference is tedious and expensive is not to be doubted; but the true question is, not whether it is tedious and expensive, but, firstly, whether the sort of cases that are sent to a reference could be dealt with in any other way, unless the circuits were to continue the whole year round, and with double the staff of judges, counsel, &c. that now attend them. Secondly, whether that class of cases could be properly tried with less time and expense by the courts of law as at present constituted, than by arbitration. The fact seems to be this, that a class of cases of yearly increasing magnitude, is brought before the courts of common law, for the trial of which, as an entirety, they have no adequate machinery. We mean, in particular, that class of cases in which a claim is founded on the result of an intricate account, composed of numerous items, and met by a corresponding intricate account. Litigants, having this kind of subject-matter of litigation, instead of clearing it before trial of all those matters of account which are best done, pen in hand, by accountants disputing and settling items at a table, and which, sooner or later, must be so done, throw it in all its glorious confusion into a court of law, and then wonder that what they themselves have shrunk from with adequate machinery at their disposal, should be rejected by Courts that have neither the requisite machinery nor time for disposing of it off hand. A court of law, it should be recollected, is provided properly for the purpose of determining the rights of parties on a state of things known, or assumed to be known; not of first finding out what is the state of things, and then adjudicating upon it. When a man brings an action on an instrument, or on a certain title, definite, or, for the purpose of the action, assumed to be so, the Court has before it business with which it is competent to deal at once: the jury as to the existence of the alleged facts; and the judge as to the law upon the facts found to exist. So, if even in matters of account, an action is founded on an account stated, the Court will be dealing with things within its grasp, viz. whether there is an account stated, and if there is, what is the legal effect of it? But if parties come into a court of law, as it were, with their ledgers and waste books in their hands, claiming and discharging themselves by items and cross items, as to all of which there is first an inquiry requisite upon what principle the account is made up on either side; whether it is properly made up, and what is the broad result of it, before anything can be said of that which is in fact the subject-matter of the cause, it is obvious that they are coming into court with a case not properly prepared for adjudication, and that they must be sent to a totally different ent tribunal, to eliminate from the mass of rubbish with which they have burdened their quarrel, the points on which ultimately the decision of their relative legal rights is to be founded.

In sending cases to reference, the Courts of law do, in fact, no more than that which is analogous to the daily and regular practice of the Court of Chancery, of decreeing inquiries and accounts to be taken by a Master. And they do so, we really believe, only in that class of cases in which, in truth, the jurisdiction that they exercise is equitable, viz. that class of cases in which, before anything can be determined, an account must be taken between the parties, with respect to the subject-matter on which they dispute. For this class of cases the Court of Chancery is provided with a special machinery; and the Court itself will notoriously never hear arguments on the rights of the parties, until the account that is to bring the claims down to their simplest denomination, has been taken. When this class of cases comes before a court of law, it is compelled to take some course by which the same object is to be attained; it is not provided by its constitution with the proper machinery for doing so out of court. Hence, on each occasion, it creates such machinery pro hæ vice, and refers that to be done by arbitrators which, in equity, is done by the Master.

It is perfectly useless for suitors and their attorneys to grumble at the proceeding; it is worse than useless, it is positively unjust to charge it upon assumed greediness in the Bar, or love of ease in the judges. It is a practice which, we think we have shewn, is forced upon the Courts, by suitors presenting to them cases which either are not fit at all for common law, but ought to be disposed of in equity, or which, if fit for a court of common law, are not presented to it in a state fit to be decided, but are presented to it loaded with preliminary matters of inquiry, which do not require, and cannot be permitted, to absorb the costly time and attention of judges and juries; which cannot be half so well done by them as by a couple of accountants arranging the matter in a private room, under the control of an arbitrator; and which, therefore, if not done before the cause comes into court, of necessity drive it out of court to have the accounts and other matters of detail arranged and disposed of elsewhere.

LONDON, DECEMBER 4, 1847.

In a former Number (11 Jur. p. 398) we made some observations on the capacity of a person professing the Jewish religion to sit in Parliament. The subject becomes more interesting, as the time for its discussion by the Legislature approaches, and we propose to offer a few supplementary remarks in reference to it. We shall avoid now, as then, entering into any theological disquisition, and shall confine our attention to the historical and legal views of the question.

The conclusion we arrived at in our former paper was, that there is no rule or principle of law excluding any natural-born subject from sitting in Parliament on the ground of his religious persuasion, provided he will take the prescribed or customary oaths. We cited Mirehouse v. Rennell, (7 Bligh, N. S., 322), shewing that a Jew may present to a living, and, therefore, that he may be seised of real estate, and be permitted to exercise a public trust for the direct promotion of the Protestant Episcopal Church. We may also refer to Edenborough v. The Archbishop of Canterbury, (2 Russ. 111), in which Lord Chancellor Eldon was requested to state, for the guidance of parties in a suit, whether Jews and Roman Catholics were entitled to vote at the election of a vicar, which was vested in the parishioners. His Lordship's opinion was understood to be, that Jews were entitled to vote in the election of the vicar, but that Roman Catholics were not so entitled, and at the next election votes were admitted and rejected on that principle.

The maxim, that Christianity is part of the law of the land was first applied in cases of blasphemous libels; (Taylor's case, 1 Vent. 293; Woolston's case, 2 Str. 834); it was also cited in De Costa v. De Paz, (2 Swanst. 487, n.), in which it was held, that a bequest for the express purpose of teaching the Jewish faith would be void. The last-mentioned case, however, was decided before the passing of 53 Geo. 3, c. 160, for the relief of persons who impugn the doctrine of the Trinity. There is no instance of a professed Jew having ever sat in a British Parliament, in the strict sense of a Parliament; but his Christian Majesty Henry III. had no objection to their assuming the character of legislators, for the sole purpose of imposing burdens upon themselves. Thus, we read in Millman's History of the Jews, (vol. 3, p. 346), "The nation beheld the curious spectacle of a Jewish Parliament regularly summoned; writs were issued to the sheriffs, with most extraordinary menaces of punishment in case of disobedience, to return six of the richest Jews from the more considerable towns—two from those where they were fewer in number. This Parliament met, and, like other Parliaments, was graciously informed by the Sovereign, that he must have money. 20,000 marks was the sum demanded. His Majesty's faithful Jews could boast no parliamentary privileges, nor were permitted to demand freedom of debate. They were sent home to collect the money as speedily as possible; it was to be assessed and levied among themselves; and as this enormous charge was not immediately forthcoming, the collectors were seized, with their wives and children, their goods and chattels, and imprisoned." We know not whether this can be adduced as an authority in favour of the Jews, except as an argument that compensation should be made to them.

If, for lack of home precedents, we look abroad, we find that Jews are admitted to the discharge of legislative functions in France, Holland, and the United States of America. In 1830, the French Minister for Public Instruction pronounced, in the Chamber of Deputies, a high eulogium upon the Jews since their admission to equal rights. "Their children," he said, "have been brought up in the same schools as those of their Christian brethren; they have imbibed the same principles, adopted the same habits, and become most deserving members of the State*.”

In Holland, this subject has given rise to some important statistics, shewing the effect of removing disabilities in diminishing crime. M. Mayer tells us, that between the years 1780 and 1806, the population of Amsterdam was nine-tenths Christian and one-tenth Jewish; that the latter portion were excluded from every place of honour or trust; and that Jewish criminals amounted to one-ninth of the whole number.

In 1806, partial relief was given to the Jews; and, until the year 1811, criminals of that class amounted to one-thirteenth of the whole number.

In 1811, they were completely emancipated; and, in the five following years, the criminals amongst them amounted only to one-twentieth of the whole number.†

We conclude these remarks with the following summary of the measures proposed for the relief of the Jews, taken from Mr. Hargreave's note to p. 375 of 1 Bla. Com. (21st edition)‡. “In the year 1834, a bill was brought into Parliament, to remove the Jewish disabilities, and passed in the House of Commons by large majorities, but was thrown out in the Lords. It was brought forward again in 1836, and again passed in the House of Commons, but was not introduced into the House of Lords. Lastly, in 1841, the attempt was renewed, on a motion to bring in a bill to admit Jews into municipal corporations, which passed in the House of Commons by large majorities, but was again defeated in the upper House. . . . By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 28, the declaration to be required, under 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, of all persons filling corporate offices is set aside, so far as regards sheriffs of cities and towns being counties of themselves. A Jew, therefore, may fill those offices.”

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed the following gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—Morris Charles Jones, of Liverpool, in and for the county of Chester; Thomas Warden, of Bardon, near Taunton, in and for the county of Somerset; Henry Baxter Branwhite Mason, of Wreham, near Stoke Ferry, in and for the county of Norfolk.

Reviews.

An Analytical Digest of Selected Practice Cases decided in the Common Law Courts, to Trinity Term, 1847, arranged under the several Heads of Practice, for the Facility of Reference. By RICHARD MORRIS, of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. Small 8vo. pp. 484. [Stevens & Norton.]

A very useful work;—the only wonder is, that it was not thought of before. Other digests are useful, principally as indexes to the Reports; and, if relied upon as ultimate sources of information, often mislead, because the nice distinctions and considerations upon which a judgment, involving the application of principles of law to special circumstances, depends, can seldom be sufficiently expressed in a placitum; but there is no principle and no complication of facts in a point of practice, which is never so well understood as when it is stripped of all redundancies of statement. A digest of practice cases, therefore, if carefully and sensibly executed, as this appears to be, must necessarily be extremely useful. The compiler has not bewildered himself or his readers, by seeking after an unattainable perfection of logical classification, but he has adopted the intelligible and convenient arrangement which the best books of practice have made familiar to every practitioner, whether gifted with a methodical head or not. A mere enumeration of some of the more important titles, such as Affidavit, Attorney, Award, Costa, Ejectment, Interpleader, Judgment, New Trials, Pleading, Rules, Warrant of Attorney, Writ, &c., will at once shew the every-day utility of the book.

Precedents of Conveyances and other Instruments relating to the Transfer of Land to Railway Companies, with Introductory Matter and Explanatory Note. By HENRY TYRWHITT FRIEND and T. HIBBERT WILK, Barristers at Law. 8vo. pp. 486. [Reeds.]

We owe an apology to the authors of this useful work and to our readers, for not having noticed it before; and, even now, our time and space permit us to offer but an imperfect reparation.

The forms are prefaced by the Lands' Clauses Consolidation Act, with an analysis of it and of the Railways' Clauses Act, and some preliminary observations on the mode of framing conveyances under railway acts, in which excellent reasons are offered for not using the parliamentary forms. The precedents are very numerous, and consist of conveyances arranged in conformity with the divisions of the Lands' Clauses Consolidation Act, under the heads of 1, Freeholds; 2, Copyholds; 3, Common or Waste Lands; 4, Lands in Mortgage; and 5, Rent Charges and of other forms under the heads of 7, Nominations of Surveyors, Valuations, and Nominations of Trustees to the Compensation; 8, Arbitration; 9, Jury Proceedings; 10, Miscellaneous Instruments.

To these forms are appended copious and very judicious notes. Frequent use of the book in practice enables us to characterize it as eminently practical and useful.

Equity Case Reference Table, intended as an Aid to "Noting up" the current Cases decided in the English Courts of Equity. By a BARRISTER. 8vo., pp. 4. [Reeds.]

The practice of "noting up" the decisions and statutes as they appear, is one which, for many reasons, should not be committed to a deputy, if it can be avoided. But leisure and opportunity for noting are often wanting; and as it is essential that the thing should be performed by some one, a contrivance like that before us, which, as the author observes, reduces the business to a mechanical operation capable of being undertaken by clerks of ordinary capacity, will be very acceptable to the Profession, who, if we are not mistaken, are already indebted to the learned contriver for his share in a work of greater importance, and of considerable merit.

The present publication is a sheet of four pages, which is to be followed by similar sheets at intervals, as soon as may be after the appearance of each new Number of the Chancery Reports. It comprises the cases in 9 Beavan, Part 2, and consists of three columns: the first containing the name of the case, and a hint of the points involved in it; the second, a reference to the case or cases in former Reports against which it is to be noted; and the third, a reference to the text-book or books, in which, in default of a complete library of Reports, the noting may be effected.

We think the publication very useful as it stands, but it might be much improved. Its plan is too limited. No conveyancer, no Chancery barrister, confines his reading or his noting to equity cases; his researches extend over the entire field of common law—points of common-law practice and pleading,—even of criminal law,—frequently become important to him; and the less habitually his attention is directed to those divisions of the law, the more important it is to him to possess every facility for investigating them upon occasion.

No selection of common-law cases, however judicious, can supply this want, because, even if it were possible to anticipate all future occasions, it would be quite impossible to engender confidence in the due performance of such a task. If, therefore, we did not fear that the “noting” members of the Profession are too few to ensure the commercial success of such an undertaking, we would recommend “H. T. F.” to procure assistance, and include all the Reports, and also the Statutes, in his plan. They might be classified and published separately, for the convenience of those who thought fit to confine their memoranda to certain Reports.

Another defect is the exclusion of The Jurist and the Law Journal Reports. Those Reports are now cited indifferently with the regular Reports; and as they are generally much in advance of them, it is important to have a speedy reference to them. Taken in connexion with the regular Reports, they would furnish materials for a regular monthly, or even half-monthly, publication.

Another defect is in the execution of the third column, which presents several unnecessary blanks. No reference to a book on Practice—none to a book on Trustees, though two excellent Treatises are extant—none to a book on Lunacy. Some of the “notes” in that column strike us as being superfluous.

A Supplement to the Report of the Select Committee on Legal Education, containing the Evidence of Mr. Kaumensentz. Now first printed for the Benefit of the Honourable Members of Lincoln's Inn, and of all Others whom it may concern. 8vo., pp. 15.

[Walker.]

Mr. K. or C., (we do not know how Germany has deserved the compliment which our countryman has paid him of Teutonicizing his name), thus accounts for his rushing into print:—

“While ‘The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the present State of Legal Education in England and Ireland, and the Means for its further Improvement and Extension,’ were engaged in their immortal labours, a person of the name of Kaumensentz presented himself at the door of the committee-room, and demanded to be examined. At first he was refused admittance by the usher, on the ground that he was not known to any member of the committee; but he ultimately succeeded in getting a hearing. As it will appear to whoever reads the following pages, he was, at the end of his examination, committed to the Tower by the chairman, and he has only lately obtained his liberation from that residence by fulfilling the condition prescribed, which, however, did not turn out so difficult as might have been supposed, as the professor's stock of omniscience proved to be of a somewhat limited description. Mr. Kaumensentz' first care, after his restoration to freedom, was to call for a copy of the report of the committee he had offended; but he was more disgusted than surprised to find that not only was the Report framed in direct opposition to his views, but that all trace of his presence before the committee had been removed, and every word of his evidence suppressed.”

The following extracts from the evidence will, perhaps, induce our judicious readers to cultivate a further acquaintance with Mr. K., (to whom, of course, they are no strangers). We have only to add, that we concur in almost everything that he says*, differing from him in a few points, perhaps, because we do wish to be wholly common-place:—

“Prid. Kalend. Græc. 1846.

“Mr. Kaumensentz called in and examined.

“1. ‘It is understood that you object to the proposed plan of requiring students of law to pass an examination before they are admitted to the bar?’—Of course I do.

“2. ‘Will you state your reasons?’—I think it rather rests with the advocates of the plan to shew that it is not objectionable. All examinations are in their nature mischievous; they encourage a system of ‘cramming,’ and of hasty superficial study; by requiring all candidates to come up to a certain fixed standard of knowledge, they prevent, or at all events impede, students from pursuing one particular branch of their profession according to individual taste and genius, and thus check one great source of the advancement of learning,—the sub-division of subjects; their natural effect, in short, is to create and foster mediocrity. Besides, to a grown man, entering seriously on what is to be the serious business of his life, it is most offensive to find himself compelled to return to the condition of a school-boy, except in cases where his reason tells him that such a course is necessary for the general good. In one or two cases, as those of the attorney and the medical man, the safety of the public requires that their competency should be ascertained before they are allowed to practise; but the safety of the public, that is, self-defence, is the only ground which can justify any interference between a man and the free license of exercising the profession of his choice.

“3. ‘What distinction can you draw in this respect between the attorney or medical man and the barrister?’—The nature of the professions is entirely different. Medical men and attorneys are to be employed by persons who are not capable of judging of their acquirements, and who are, therefore, obliged to take them on trust; they are liable to be called on to act suddenly, and in cases of vital importance. It would, therefore, be a great evil to the public, if people were allowed to hold themselves out as medical men or attorneys, without having a competent knowledge of

* The editor has to observe, that the above notice of Mr. K.'s extraordinary production is from a contumacious correspondent, whose heterodoxy is pardoned in consideration of the legal information which his contributions (unlike the present) usually contain.

‘their respective callings; and, therefore, in self-defence, we require them to submit to an examination. None of this reasoning applies to the barrister. He is employed solely by people perfectly capable of judging of his powers and capacity, namely, the attorneys; he is not liable to be called on to act in sudden emergencies, and it can do no harm whatever to the public, that five thousand persons who do not know one word of law should have the privilege of wearing wigs and gowns, and calling themselves barristers, with leave to practise as such—if they can get any business.

“4. ‘But is this profession alone to be excluded from the benefit of a test of which every other possesses the advantage? Is the advocate to be the only man in the community of whose competency to perform his duties we do not require a satisfactory test?’—I should say that is one of the most audacious pieces of misrepresentation I ever heard. The fact is, that there are but one or two professions which possess the ‘advantage’ of the test of examination, and those for the exceptional reasons I have mentioned. I should like to know what ‘satisfactory test’ we have (by direct means) of the competency of the banker or merchant, of the journalist or the reviewer, of the county magistrate, the member of Parliament, the cabinet minister—in short, of ninety-nine hundredths of the men who exercise a responsible calling in the world? Why should not the barrister be left to be tried and tested by that ordeal of public opinion which is found practically sufficient in those other cases—the judgment of his employers, his companions, and the public? I never heard any argument in favour of what is now called legal education, that is, compulsory education and examinations before admission to the bar, which would not apply with exactly the same force to the case of candidates for Parliament or for the Premiership.

“5. ‘But what do you think of ‘the indecency which may any day be exhibited here of a man being called to the bar who never opened a book in his life—nay, who is incapable of reading one line, or even of signing his name otherwise than with a mark or cross?’ Is not ‘such an outrage on all common decorum quite possible in England?’—I really cannot waste my time in answering such nonsensical declamation. In all admissible senses of possibility, I say it is quite impossible that such an incident should occur; impossible, in the same sense in which it is impossible that a man should come to be Governor of the Bank, without knowing a sovereign from a shilling. But if this ‘possibility’ were much more possible than it is, what then? What harm would it do anybody that there should be a million of these ‘possible’ marksmen-barristers in the world? They would merely get no business, that is all. It is ‘quite possible’ that a magazine writer may be an ass, and, by the way, such a one can do harm; but I have not yet heard any proposals for ‘requiring satisfactory tests of the competency’ of contributors to the ‘Law Review.’

“6. ‘But does it not sometimes happen that barristers, with some showy acquirements and technical knowledge, but without real solid learning, are able to get more business than they deserve?’—No doubt it does sometimes happen.

“7. ‘Do you not think the plan of examinations would prevent this?’—I do not think that the man who has dexterity enough to take in the most trying tribunal in the world, consisting of the attorneys who are employing him, and rivals who are watching him through years of actual practice, would find it very difficult to humbug two or three professors in a set examination. I do not imagine that a green baize

‘table cover and a leaden inkstand are such an Ithuriel’s spear as all that.

“8. ‘It is complained, that there is a great deficiency in what we call the philosophy of jurisprudence, among even our most successful lawyers. Do you consider that to be the case?’—So far as I understand the term, I believe it is.

“9. ‘Do you not attribute this to the want of a systematic legal education?’—If you mean that people do not know what they never learnt, of course I do. But the cause of the want of this ‘philosophy’ lies in the nature of our laws, which are peculiar to this country, and very technical and unsystematic, and in the little communication we have with other countries on matters of international law, owing to our insular position and to other circumstances. Of course, as there is little demand for this species of learning, few people devote their lives to providing a supply of it. If you want to have great jurists in this country, you must begin by introducing a new system of laws.

“13. ‘You consider, then, that it is no part of the duty of the Inns of Court to establish lectureships, or otherwise to contribute towards the spread of legal education?’—Excuse me, I never said that; I think it very right and proper that the Inns of Court should found lectureships; not, however, as an educating body, but in the same way as they might publish books, as contributions towards the general facilities for the study of the law. I think the latter object, too, (that of publishing books), is one to which they might well apply some of the funds and opportunities at their disposal.

“16. ‘Have you any further observations that you wish to make?’—No.

“17. ‘Then give me leave to tell you, Sir, that we consider the whole of your examination to have been a series of insults to this committee, and indeed, that your presence here at all is a gross violation of the privileges of the House; and I move that you be forthwith committed to the Tower, and not released thence until you have consented to pass a satisfactory examination on things in general, before the Professor of Omniscience from the London University.’—And give me leave to tell you, Sir, in return, that I consider this whole inquiry to be an utter humbug and delusion, got up at the desire of a few silly doctrinaires, who fancy that nothing is going on right that is not clipped and squeezed into accordance with their own pre-conceived notions; and that you, all of you, committee-men, witnesses, and all, are as complete a set of —

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

In addition to Assurances on Healthy Lives, this Society continues to grant Policies on the Lives of Persons subject to Gout, Asthma, Rheumatism, and other Diseases, on the payment of a Premium proportioned to the increased risk. The plan of granting Assurances on Invalid Lives originated with this office in the beginning of 1824.

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any station, and of every age.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 22. per cent. on the Premiums paid; the third, 28. per cent. The fourth bonus, declared Jan. 1847, averaged rather more than 80. per cent.; and from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to exceed that amount.

Tables of Rates, with a full Report, (recently printed), can be obtained of the Society's Agents, or by addressing a letter to

GEO. H. PINCKARD, Actuary.

No. 99, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

"This treatise shows considerable learning and research on so much of the common law as may be applicable to cases coming before the New County Courts. There are various editions of the Small Debt Act, with useful notes and criticisms, but Mr. Moseley has not limited his labours to mere annotations on the Act, he has enlarged his view to the rules and principles of law, as they may be, or ought to be, administered in these Courts."—Legal Observer, Sept. 18, 1847.

"In preparing this second part of his treatise on the law and practice of the County Courts, Mr. Moseley has evidently resolved to do justice to his theme, and instead of a mere re-arrangement of the Statute, with extracts from another book of the editor, by way of notes, as we have seen one treatise on the New Courts to consist of, Mr. Moseley has produced a work which may claim to be an original one, and which can scarcely fail to be a standard one. The present part opens with a review of the jurisdiction of the Courts as to persons, places, and things, and how it is to be enforced, or how answered by suggestion, by pleading in abatement, or claim of consanguinity."—Law Times, Aug. 14, 1847.

LONDON, DECEMBER 11, 1847.

In a case very recently before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, not yet reported, (Greatrex v. Greatrex, 7th December, 1847), his Honor granted an injunction at the suit of a member of a firm against his co-partner, restraining the defendant, who had removed the partnership books from their proper place of keeping, from "keeping or permitting to be kept, placed, or deposited the said books in any other place than the place of business" without the plaintiff's consent; in effect, therefore, according to the construction put on this species of injunction, compelling him to bring back the books to the place of business, and to leave them there. His Honor does not appear to have had any doubt about the jurisdiction; nor was it likely that he should have any such doubt, having regard to the long train of decisions in the same direction since Robinson v. Lord Byron (1 Bro. C. C., App., 588) and Lane v. Newdigate, (10 Ves. 192), and particularly having regard to the case of Taylor v. Davis, (3 Beav. Notes, p. 388).

It is of advantage, certainly, that a jurisdiction should exist to compel a person to do that which he has agreed to do, or that which equitably he ought to do, even though the jurisdiction can only be exercised by the circuitous method of preventing him from doing anything, not being the performance of his agreement or the execution of his duty. But it is much to be lamented, that the direct course of ordering that to be done which ought to be done, cannot be adopted, and that courts of equity should be forced, as it were, to stultify themselves, by alleging a defect of power to make an order, and yet, in effect, making it. If it be said, that the Court cannot create a new jurisdiction, and that to make a positive order on a defendant, that he should pull down a building (Rankin v. Hushison, 4 Sim.

13) or fill up an excavation, (Spencer v. The London and Birmingham Railway Company, 8 Sim. 193), or bring back books improperly taken away, as in Greatrex v. Greatrex, the answer is, first, that there is not wanting authority for saying, that the Court of Chancery has a certain extent of power of creating a new jurisdiction if the old jurisdiction is insufficient for the purposes of justice in a more modern and complicated state of society; and, secondly, that in fact the Court, if it were called upon to enforce these quasi mandatory injunctions on a motion for contempt, would find itself placed under the necessity of either abandoning in many, perhaps in all cases, the substance of its order, or of asserting a new and somewhat arbitrary jurisdiction, viz. that of construing an order, not according to its language, but according to the intention of its maker. To explain what we mean, let us take one of the decided cases, The Birmingham Railway case, for instance, (8 Sim. 193), above referred to. Now, in that case, what the company had done was, without the authority of its act of Parliament, to make an excavation, a sort of ravine, in a street, whereby the plaintiff was deprived of the access to his own premises. The order made was, that the defendants might be restrained from continuing to cut through, stop up, and injure the horse and carriage-road, &c. Now, if there were not a tacit understanding, that, on a motion to commit the defendant for breach of such an injunction, alleging that he did nothing more, that he did not fill up the cavity, but remained perfectly quiescent, the Court would construe its order to mean that he should fill it up, it is manifest that a defendant would simply laugh at the order. Let us see, then, whether, first, such a construction of such an order would not be most violent; and secondly, if it would be the natural and proper construction, whether the order is not identical with, not merely equivalent to, a direct and positive mandate. First, as to the construction; to restrain a man from continuing to cut through or stop up a road, or, as the Court expressed it in that case, from continuing an excavation in its existing state, and from enlarging it, is to restrain him from doing every imaginable act in the world except changing the state of the excavation, in the direction of contracting its dimensions. But although the order amounts to compulsion upon him to do something towards filling up the excavation, it wants positiveness, in reference to the extent to which, or the mode in which, he is to fill it up. If he were to do any act towards filling it up, he would, in strictness, comply with the order; if he were quite to fill it up, and then go on to build up an embankment upon it, he would still be obeying the order by not allowing the excavation to remain in its existing state, and not making it larger. So that, on a motion for contempt, unless language were imported by construction into the order which it does not contain,—unless, in fact, it were construed to mean that the defendant should abstain from every state of existence except that of being actively employed in filling up the excavation till he had restored its precise cubical contents to their precise antecedent locality, it would be as easy to comply with such an order, and yet not restore the ground to its original state, as it was to make the order.

Again, take the leading case of Lane v. Newdigate, above cited, where the order was that the defendant should be restrained from impeding the enjoyment of the plaintiff by keeping the works out of repair, and from preventing such his enjoyment by the use of any locks erected by the defendant, or by continuing the removal of a particular stop gate. Now, supposing it possible that works can be kept out of repair, or, in other words, passing over the technical inaccuracy of treating the decay of works, which is the result of the absence of labour, as being the result of the active interference of man, and getting over the absurdity of talking of continuing the removal of a thing, as an act, when it is in truth the absence of an act; and the still greater absurdity of treating, as capable at all of continuance, the removal of a thing, which is of necessity an act taking up some limited space of time, and which, when once done, is as much past and incapable of continuance as the past hour;—getting over, we say, all these technical objections to the grammatical sense of such an order, how is it in substance to be enforced, except by importing into it, as the limits within which the defendant is to be restrained from not acting, terms certainly not to be found in it, viz. the precise terms of what would be a proper specification of the work to be constructed?

No doubt the Court would so construe its order, that its jurisdiction might not be practically set aside and its intention defeated. But it can scarcely be contended that the construction would not be rather an implication of the actual intention of the Court, than a consequence of the words of its order. And this brings us to the second consideration, viz. whether an order, which though called negative, and framed in a negative form, requires to be, in order to be carried into effect, so construed as to direct a man to do something, which is ascertained by forbidding him from doing any earthly thing but that one particular thing; whether we say the jurisdiction to make such an order, is not absolutely identical with the jurisdiction to make a direct and positive order to do the thing. If I have authority to say to a banker, "You shall abstain from not paying money to A.; and you shall abstain from paying him any money except 10l.," is not that authority absolutely identical with an authority to direct the payment of 10l.? The whole principle of the mandatory injunction is, that the Court assumes authority to restrain a man from doing nothing, and at the same time of restraining him from doing anything except a particular thing. There is and can be no difference between such an authority, and authority to order him to be active, and to direct his activity to the completion of a particular object; in other words, to order him to do a specific act.

LONDON, DECEMBER 18, 1847.

THERE is no question in the course of Chancery practice on which there is more continual difficulty experienced, than on that of reading affidavits in support of a motion for an injunction or receiver, &c., where the answer has come in. The difficulty is caused by this, that such questions arise in cases of two distinct classes, to each of which a particular principle is applicable; while the judges, in deciding the cases, have not unfrequently used language so general as to lay the foundation for future argument, that they were applying generally the rule which, in fact, we apprehend they intended to confine to the particular class of case before them. We will endeavour, in this paper, to state as accurately as we can, what we conceive to be the general rules established by the authorities, and the exceptions to them, observing, at the same time, that it would be of great advantage to the Profession if, on this subject, some general orders were framed, so that men might know, with tolerable certainty, when they may and when they may not read affidavits on motion.

There are two general rules on this subject: the first rule is, that, in respect of all matters directly or indirectly going to the question of the plaintiff's title, he must found his title, on motion, upon the answer itself. No affidavits can be read after answer at all, either to contradict the answer, or to prove matters ignored by the answer, or otherwise. This rule applies not merely to motions for an injunction either special or to restrain proceedings at law, but to motions for a receiver, or for production of documents, and, we believe we may say, generally to any application by motion after answer.

To it there are, we believe, only two exceptions. The first is, that where the bill states documents, and the answer neither admits nor denies them, affidavits may be read to verify those documents. (Barrett v Tuckell, Jac. 167; Edwards v. Jones, 1 Phill. 501). But the exception does not go one step further than the verification of documents, and does not admit of affidavits to prove facts alleged by the bill, neither admitted nor denied by the answer. This was finally settled by the case of Edwards v. Jones, in which the authorities having brought under review, the Lord Chancellor thus expressed himself:—"Where the question at issue is not the existence of a document, but a fact, I think that an affidavit cannot be admitted to prove it, an interlocutory application like the present, (a motion to produce documents), though the answer neither admits nor denies it. There is an apparent discrepancy between the authorities on the subject; but I think that is the fair result of them." It must be remembered, however, that the facts here alluded to are facts connected with the question of title; and that, on this subject, when the word "title" is used, it is used in the strict sense of the plaintiff's title to the subject-matter of the suit, not in the more loose sense of his title to relief. It must be recollected also, that, with regard to affidavits going to matter of title, it is immaterial whether they were filed before or after the answer. They cannot be read at all, except in the excepted cases above noticed.

The second exception to this first general rule, if, indeed, it can be called strictly an exception, at present rests on the authority of only one decided case, Gibson v. Nicol, (6 Beav. 422). In that case, the plaintiff being ready to move, (for a receiver and injunction), the motion stood over, at the request of the defendant, to enable him to put in his answer, and in that state of circumstances, affidavits in respect of title filed after the answer, were allowed to be read against it. The case is very shortly reported, and all that is stated as judgment is, that, under the circumstances, the Court thought the answer must be treated as an affidavit. It would seem probable that the ground of the decision was, that there was an implied undertaking on the part of the defendant to allow his answer to be treated as an affidavit, as it could not be supposed that the plaintiff, being in a position to move upon affidavits, would agree to postpone his motion, if the consequence were to be not merely delay, but placing himself at the mercy of the defendant's allegations, without the power of contradicting them. If this be the principle of Gibson v. Nicol, it is scarcely an exception to the general rule; it is rather an authority for reading affidavits against the answer on matters of title, where the conduct of the parties amounts to an implied contract that the rule shall not be insisted upon by the defendant.

The second general rule is, that where the object of the motion is to prevent acts in the nature of destruction or waste, or exclusion, or, to speak generally, acts injurious to the property to which the plaintiff's title is admitted, affidavits may be read against the answer, to establish the fact of destruction or waste or other injury. In the application of this rule, there is some discrepancy between the authorities, on the question, how far affidavits filed after the coming in of the answer can be read against it. In some cases, a distinction has apparently been made (in respect to injunctions at least) between a motion for an injunction made after answer, and a motion made by the defendant after answer, to dissolve an injunction obtained before. In the former case, it has been held, that affidavits filed after the answer could not be read against it. (Smyth v. Smyth, 1 Swans. 252). In the latter, that they may. The true principle seems, however, to be, that, if the plaintiff files no affidavits in support of his bill before the answer, he must take his right to relief in reference to acts of waste, as well as his title, strictly so called, from the answer. But if he throws out evidence for the defendant before answer, and so gives him an opportunity of rebutting it, then he may in his turn rebut the allegations of the answer by further evidence. (Smyth v. Smyth, supra, and Mansor v. Tenner, 2 Hare, 600. In the latter case, Wigram, V. C., stated the rule thus: "With regard to acts of waste and analogous cases, as mismanagement and exclusion, if affidavits are filed before the answer, the Court will not only read them against the answer, but also the affidavits filed after the answer, whether the injunction was obtained or not. All the cases decide that affidavits filed after an answer cannot be read against the answer, if affidavits have not been filed before, in support of a motion of which notice was given after the answer." In that case his Honor added somewhat to the rule, by rejecting the affidavits filed after the answer, no affidavits, strictly so called, having been filed before, but the notice of motion having been given before answer. However, the plaintiff had, with his notice of motion, given a notice that he should read an answer put in by himself in another suit, as an affidavit, so that in a sense an affidavit was filed. The case is sui generis, and the particular decision therefore scarcely a general authority. But the principle of the admissibility or non-admissibility, on a motion, of affidavits filed after answer is distinctly stated, so as to afford a clear guide, if, as we apprehend to be the case, it is borne out by the authorities.

We believe the above to be an accurate statement of the doctrine regarding the admissibility of affidavits in support of a motion made after answer. On what principle of common sense the distinctions are founded, it would be exceedingly difficult to pronounce. Why an answer should be believed, so as to shut out all evidence on a matter of title, more than on a matter of waste or exclusion, it is difficult to understand. The only real question in all cases is, whether the plaintiff states a true case; and the rule that permits him to bring affidavits to contradict the answer on the question whether the defendant has cut trees, and shuts him out from bringing affidavits to prove that Howell Powell was alive at a particular time, (Edwards v. Jones, cited supra), is a purely arbitrary, and, we humbly submit, a purely senseless rule. The best rule for the transaction of business would be, to treat the answer, in all cases of interlocutory applications, as an affidavit, so as to admit affidavits against it on all points; and to throw over all the fine and useless distinctions about whether the affidavits were filed before or after the answer. All that the Court wants on an interlocutory application, on which it never pronounces a final order, is to know what is the truth, upon such evidence as can then be produced. There is nothing in an answer in itself more conclusive than in an affidavit; and we trust some day to see a general order abolishing all the technical rules and distinctions that at present harass the plaintiff, and embarrass both parties, in respect of motions made after answer.

PINLSON'S LEADING CASES ON PLEADING.

Just published, in royal 8vo., price 12s. boards.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES ON PLEADING, and PARTIES to ACTIONS; with Practical Notes, elucidating the Principles of Pleading, (as exemplified in Cases of most frequent occurrence in Practice), by a reference to the earliest Authorities; and designed to assist both the Practitioner and Student. By W. PINLSON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Special Pleader.

"The Notes themselves are learned, and, we may add, elaborate Treatises upon the matters to which they relate. . . . The frequent reference to the very fountain heads of the Law,—the Year Books and the older Reports,—honourably distinguishes these Notes."—Law Magazine, No. 10, N. S., February, 1847.

Stevens & Norton, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn; and 104, Fleet-street.

This day is published, in 1 vol. 12mo., price 7s. 6d. cloth boards.
A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE LAW concerning HORSES, RACING, WAGERS, and GAMING. With an Appendix. By G. H. HEWIT OLIPHANT, B.A., Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

CONTENTS OF THE WORK:—

Buying, Selling, Exchanging; Unsoundness, Vice, Warranty, False Representation; Auctions, and Repositories; the Privileges and Liabilities of Innkeepers, Livery-stable Keepers, Farriers, Trainers, &c.; Hiring and Borrowing Horses; Negligent Driving; the Rule of the Road, and Trespass in Hunting. The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported Cases; and the Statutes to the present Time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

In addition to Assurances on Healthy Lives, this Society continues to grant Policies on the Lives of Persons subject to Gout, Asthma, Rupture, and other Diseases, on the payment of a Premium proportioned to the increased risk. The plan of granting Assurances on Lapsed Lives originated with this office in the beginning of 1824.

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any station, and of every age.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 22l. per cent. on the Premiums paid; the third, 28l. per cent. The fourth bonus, declared Jan. 1847, averaged rather more than 36l. per cent.; and from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to exceed that amount.

Tables of Rates, with a full Report, (recently printed), can be obtained of the Society's Agents, or by addressing a letter to

LONDON, DECEMBER 25, 1847.

A Mr. Scott has lately addressed to one of the Queen's judges a letter of complaint, on which as it was read in open court, all the world is perfectly at liberty to comment; and we must say that the doctrine and reasoning of that letter are of the strangest character. The sum of the complaint, stripped of certain vituperations, couched in a not unambitious style, and levelled at both the Vice-Chancellor of England and the Bar, was this:—That his Honor had permitted the time of his Court to be taken up, to the exclusion of other business, by The Great Western Railway case, (commonly known as the broad and narrow gauge case), and the lengthened arguments of counsel thereon; and that he had done so uselessly, because he well knew, that, whatever his decision was, there would be an appeal from it to the Lord Chancellor. Inferring from the statement made by Mr. Scott of that which he considers wrong in the conduct of the Vice-Chancellor, what is the course of conduct that he would have considered right, we presume it would be this: that the Vice-Chancellor should either have refused to hear the case at all; or, pro forma hearing it, should have refused de facto to hear counsel, and should have made a decision au hasard; or that, pretending to hear the case, and to hear counsel thereon, he should have, in fact, cut short the arguments of counsel, after some definite consumption of time; or, lastly, that he should have postponed the case, because it was long and intricate, to make way for others, because they happened to be moderately short and easy to be disposed of. Unless he was to take one of these courses, we know not what course he was to take, except that which he did take, and which is usual, viz. to hear the broad and narrow gauge case at the time when the counsel opening it was, according to the practice of the Court, entitled to bring it on; and to hear it through, if counsel thought fit to argue it, without permitting himself to be influenced by the anticipation of an appeal, a course of proceeding the occurrence of which was obviously, in fact, uncertain, and of the occurrence of which, if it had been quite certain, the Court could not judicially take the slightest notice.

The broad and narrow gauge case differed in no way from any other case, except in this, that it was long and intricate, and involved interests of vast amount. The consequence of these properties was, that eminent counsel were retained by both sides; and we presume those counsel were so instructed by their clients, as to consider it their duty to present the case to the Court in all its bearings, and with all the argument which, in their judgment, they thought likely to influence the Court. In all this there was nothing unusual, nothing but what was consistent with the strict rights of the parties, nothing that the Court could have checked or interrupted, or even negatived, without injustice to the parties to the suit; nothing in the conduct of counsel that could have been neglected without a dereliction of the duty they owed to their clients. The sum and substance of Mr. Scott's argument comes simply to this, that persons who have vast interests at stake in their litigation, ought not to be heard in their turn, or ought not to be heard fully, because their business being heavy and taking up much time, postpones the business next after it, more than if it were light. Before Mr. Scott can establish his case against the Court and the Bar, he must shew that there is a distinction between suitors having great amounts at stake, and smaller suitors, as to their right to be represented by counsel. It is not yet, certainly, the rule of any Court, and we trust it never will be, that a suitor is to be limited in his right to select his counsel, in the inverse ratio of the importance of his suit, or at all. There is, as is well known, a wholesome check upon the suitor, by the rules regarding the taxation of costs, and an equally wholesome check upon the diffuseness of counsel—a check which operates most strongly on the most learned and able, and those of the highest reputation, viz. the check imposed by a discreet aversion to fatigue the Court, and weaken the case by a repetition of arguments already sufficiently pressed.

Subject to these checks, it is the right of every suitor to have the services of such counsel and such number of counsel as in his judgment are necessary to prepare and present his case properly, and, subject to such check, it is the duty of counsel to argue a case as long as may be necessary for impressing on the Court, so far as is practicable, the particular view that counsel think important to the interests of the client. To talk of a judge's facility because he hears counsel out, and those, not counsel who desire to talk, for the sake of talking, but counsel whose abundant avocations make a saving of time of at least as much importance to them as it can be to any one else, is simply to talk nonsense, and to blame a Judge for doing what he has no power to refuse.

With regard to the notion that the Court ought not to permit its time to be taken up with hearing long arguments on a case, because the Judge is well aware that it cannot rest upon his decision, that is also simply nonsense. No one can by any possibility know or feel any certain belief that there will be an appeal in any given case. For though the parties may go into court with the full determination on both sides to appeal against an adverse decision, yet it is well known that in some of the bitterest of these cases of pre-arranged appeal, such an order is made, that though it pleases neither party, it takes from each the desire of further litigation, and produces acquiescence or compromise. But, independently of the fact, it is scarcely necessary to say to any lawyer at least, that if the parties themselves think fit to bring a case before a court of primary jurisdiction, or if they are obliged to do so in the first instance by the rules of the court, it would be the highest dereliction of duty, both in the Judge and the Bar to suffer any personal notion of an appeal to interfere with the strict discharge of their respective functions, which are, in the Bar, to argue the case; and in the Court, to hear the case argued. Nothing, we must again repeat, could be more unjust or more inconvenient than the sort of practice that Mr. Scott would seem to desire, of the Judge cutting a case short, or postponing it to others, because the interests at stake in it are vast, or because from their very vastness and importance, it may be anticipated as probable that the parties will not rest satisfied without the decision of a court of appeal.

We have taken up this subject not from any personal desire to flagellate Mr. Scott, of whom we have not the slightest knowledge, and of whose communication to the Vice-Chancellor we should not have taken any notice, if it had not assumed the character of a public document, being an attack both on the Bench and the Bar. But we take notice of it, and expose the unsoundness and injustice of its reasoning, because it contains just that sort of vituperation which is very captivating to the thoughtless and ignorant, and which lays the foundation for sarcasms and witticisms that assume a character of truth from mere repetition, and end by casting ridicule upon men, especially if they be men eminent for ability and success, for simply doing their duty.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE PRACTICE IN EQUITY AS TO DEFENDANTS OUT OF THE JURISDICTION.

Upon the argument of the appeal in Fordyce v. Bridges, some questions were put by the Lord Chancellor to counsel, as to the practice in cases where parties interested in the subject of a suit are out of the jurisdiction; and there seemed to be some doubt on two points: first, whether it is necessary to pray process against persons so circumstanced; secondly, what is the proper mode of proving the fact. It may be thought useful to bring together the authorities, with a view to shew what has been, and is, the practice on these two points.

In the first place, it has not always been considered necessary to make a person who is out of the jurisdiction a party to a suit in which he has an interest. In Lord Redesdale's Treatise it is stated, that the fact of a person who ought to be a party, being out of the jurisdiction of the Court, is, in most cases, a sufficient reason for not bringing him before the Court. The author, however, goes on to say that it is usual to add his name as a party to the bill, so far as may be necessary to connect his case with that of the other parties; and the bill may also pray process against him in case he should become amenable to such process. (4th edit., p. 164). Lord Redesdale's statement of the practice was confirmed in 1825, by Sir John Leach, V. C., who expressly decided that the omission in the prayer of process of the name of a party who was out of the jurisdiction, did not render the record defective. (Haddock v. Thomlinson, 2 S. & S. 219). Two years later, however, his Honor seems to have altered his opinion; for he then decided, "that it is not enough to state that persons who, in respect of interest, are necessary parties, are out of the jurisdiction; the bill must go on to pray process against them. (Murray v. De Tastet, 1 Beav. 109, n.). Citing this case as an authority, Lord Langdale allowed a demurrer for want of a party, who was stated in the bill to be out of the jurisdiction, but against whom process was not prayed. (Brookes v. Burt, 1 Beav. 106). The present Lord Chancellor, when Master of the Rolls, is stated to have previously made a similar decision in a case of Taylor v. Fisher, which is not reported. (1 Beav. 111, n.). In a more recent case, Sir J. Wigram observed, that the case of Haddock v. Thomlinson had been disapproved of; and he stated the present practice to be, to name the absent person as a party to the record, prove him out of the jurisdiction, and pray process against him in case he comes within the jurisdiction. (Faulner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, 209).

There may have been reasons for greater laxity formerly, which no longer exist in the same force. The difficulties which the absence of interested parties threw in the way of plaintiffs have been much lessened of late years. In some cases the Court is enabled to make a decree saving the rights of absent parties. Thus, in the case last cited, the Vice-Chancellor thought, that, though in point of form, the person whose absence was objected to, ought to have been a party, yet, as none of the parties to the record had any interest in requiring his presence, and his presence could only be required on the ground of some interest in himself, it might be dispensed with, and a decree might be made saving his rights under the 40th Order of 1841. It can hardly be necessary to observe that the fact of a person's presence being required in respect of an interest of his own, would be the very reverse of a reason for making a decree in his absence, except with a saving of his rights. The interest of an absent party, however, may be such that a decree cannot be made saving his rights; (see 2 Hare, 586); and for such cases a remedy is provided by the acts 2 Will. 4, c. 33, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 82, allowing service of subpoena to be made beyond the jurisdiction, and the 33rd Order of May, 1845, under which, on proof of such service, an appearance may be entered for such persons.

With respect to the proof requisite of the absence from the jurisdiction of a person who ought to be a party, there has been also some difference of practice. Lord Redesdale seems to have considered that an admission of the fact by the defendant, without proof, would be sufficient. (P. 164). This can only be understood of an admission by parties sui juris: the admission of infants or married women could not be acted on; and from the language of Sir J. Leach in Wilkinson v. Beale, it seems that he did not consider it clear that he could act upon the admission even of an adult defendant. (4 Mad. 408). And more recent cases have established, that an admission is not enough; but the fact ought to be regularly proved before the hearing, although it has been much the practice not to do so. Where a bill sought an account, and a party interested in the account was out of the jurisdiction, but the fact was not proved, the Court, although it was admitted, directed the cause to stand over, in order that an interrogatory might be exhibited to prove it. (Egginton v. Burton, 1 Hare, 488). In that case there was no one before the Court who represented an interest similar to that of the absent party: this distinguished it from the case of Butter v. Boston, (5 Mad. 47), where leave to exhibit an interrogatory for a similar purpose was given; but there being parties before the Court who had similar interests with the party out of the jurisdiction, the accounts were allowed to be taken in the meantime. In Hughes v. Eades, (1 Hare, 486), where parties interested in the real estate sought to be affected, were alleged and admitted, but not proved to be out of the jurisdiction, the Vice-Chancellor would not make a decree affecting the real estate, but gave leave to exhibit interrogatories, as in Egginton v. Burton, (1 Hare, 488). In this case his Honor expressly said, that the plaintiff ought to have gone into evidence on this part of his case before the hearing; and he professed his intention of adhering in future to the course adopted in those two cases. In Faulkner v. Daniel, above cited, his Honor again said, that the usual course is to prove a party out of the jurisdiction. And although it seems, that, in some cases, a reference has been made to a Master to inquire whether a party was out of the jurisdiction, yet Lord Langdale has refused to make such an order, saying that it was not the practice, but that the proper course was to obtain leave to exhibit an interrogatory to prove that fact. (Dibbs v. Gorea, 1 Beav. 457). It has been remarked that there does not seem to be any other case than that of a defendant out of the jurisdiction, in which the Court throws upon the plaintiff the proof, by evidence at the hearing, of a fact admitted by competent defendants. (1 Dan. Ch. Pr., by Headlam, p. 200). It is not necessary to inquire here into the reasons for this exception to the general practice; but it may be observed that the case is one of a peculiar character, where the plaintiff asks the Court to proceed in the absence of a person who ought to be before it, for which departure from its general practice the Court may well require, in the first instance, a reason grounded on something more satisfactory than the defendant's admission of a fact which he may have no interest in disputing.

The authorities above cited seem to establish these points: that where a person who ought to be a party to a suit is out of the jurisdiction, he must be named as a defendant in the prayer of process; that if he continues absent, evidence ought to be gone into to prove that fact before the hearing; that if that is omitted to be done, the Court in general will not refer it to the Master to inquire as to the fact, but will permit the defect to be made good, by exhibiting an interrogatory to prove it; and that it will not of course proceed to give directions to be carried into effect contingently upon the fact of absence being proved.

LONDON, JANUARY 1, 1848.

RECENT events have directed attention to the provisions of the stat. 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, which relate to the appointment of Bishops. The title of the statute is, "An Act restraining the Payment of Annates;" the object in passing it was to render the King, instead of the Pope, substantially the elector of Archbishops and Bishops. Accordingly, in the 3rd section, after reciting, that, in the act 23 Hen. 8, c. 20, "it is not plainly and certainly expressed in what manner and fashion Archbishops and Bishops shall be elected, presented, invested, and consecrated within this realm, and in all other the King's dominions," it is enacted, that no person shall be presented to the See of Rome for the dignity of an Archbishop or Bishop, nor procure bulls from, nor pay annates or first fruits to, such See.

By the 4th section, "At every avoidance of every Archbishopric or Bishopric within this realm, or in any other the King's dominions, the King may grant to the prior and convent, or the dean and chapter of the cathedral churches or monasteries where the See of such Archbishopric or Bishopric shall happen to be void, a license under the Great Seal, as of old time hath been accustomed, to proceed to election of an Archbishop or Bishop of the See so being void, with a letter missive, containing the name of the person which they shall elect and choose; by virtue of which license, the said dean and chapter, or prior and convent, shall, with all speed and celerity, in due form, elect and choose the same person named in the said letters missive to the dignity and office of the Archbishopric or Bishopric so being void, and none other; and if they do defer or delay their election above twelve days next after such license or letters missive to them delivered, then for every such default the King's Highness, his heirs and successors, at their liberty and pleasure, shall nominate and present, by their letters-patent under their Great Seal, such a person to the said office and dignity so being void, as they shall think able and convenient for the same; and every such nomination and presentment to be made by the King's Highness, if it be to the office and dignity of a Bishop, shall be made to the Archbishop and Metropolitan of the province where the See of the same bishopric is void," &c.

By the 5th section, "Whosoever such presentment or nomination shall be made by the King's Highness by virtue and authority of this act, and according to the tenor of the same, then every Archbishop and Bishop to whose hands any such presentment and nomination shall be directed, shall with all speed and celerity invest and consecrate the person nominated and presented by the King's Highness. And if the said dean and chapter or prior and convent, after such license and letters-patent missive to them directed, within the said twelve days do elect and choose the said person mentioned in the said letters missive according to the request of the King's Highness, to be made by the said letters missive in that behalf, then their election shall stand good and effectual to all intents, and the person so elected, after certification made of the same election under the common and current seal of the electors to the King's Highness, shall be reputed and taken by the name of lord elected of the said dignity and office that he shall be elected unto, and then making such oath and fealty only to the King's Majesty, his heirs and successors, as shall be appointed for the same, the King's Highness, by his letters-patent, under his Great Seal, shall signify the said election, if it be to the dignity of a Bishop, to the Archbishop and Metropolitan of the province where the see of the said bishopric was made void," &c.

The 7th section enacts, that "If the prior and convent of any monastery, or dean and chapter of any cathedral church, where the See of any Archbishop or Bishop is within any of the King's dominions, after such license as is afore rehearsed shall be delivered to them, proceed not to election, and signify the same according to the tenor of this act within the space of twenty days next after such license shall come to their hands, or else, if any Archbishop or Bishop within any of the King's dominions after any such election, nomination, or presentation shall be signified unto them by the King's letters-patents, shall refuse or do not confirm, invest, and consecrate with all due circumstance as is aforesaid, every such person as shall be so elected, nominated, or presented, and to them signified, as is above mentioned, within twenty days next after the King's letters-patents of such signification or presentation shall come to their hands; or else, if any of them, or any other person or persons, admit, maintain, allow, obey, do, or execute any censures, excommunications, interdictions, inhibitions, or any other process or act, of what nature, name, or quality soever it be to the contrary or let of due execution of this act, that then every prior and particular person of his convent, and every dean and particular person of the chapter, and every Archbishop and Bishop, and all other persons so offending and doing contrary to this act, or any part thereof, and their aiders, counsellors, and abettors shall run in the dangers, pains, and penalties of the statute of the provision and præmunire, made in the 25th year of the reign of King Edward III, and in the 16th year of King Richard II."

In ancient times, it appears that Bishops were elected by the clergy and people, with the consent of the prince. As this, however, was found to be inconvenient, the emperors reserved the election of Bishops to themselves; but in some measure conformable to the old way, that is to say, upon a Bishop's death, the chapter sent a ring and pastoral staff to the emperor, which he delivered to the person whom he appointed as Bishop. The Pope afterwards obtained for himself the confirmation and consecration of Bishops, who were then to be freely elected by the Chapter, though such election was to be founded on the King's congé d'elire, and afterwards to be assented to by him.* It was to take away the Papal jurisdiction in this matter that the statute 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, was passed, and thereby the old course of proceeding was in some measure restored. By the statute 1 Edw. 6, c. 2, (afterwards repealed), all bishoprics were made donative; and it recites, that "whereas the elections by dean and chapters be in very deed no elections, but only by a writ of congé d'elire have colours, shadows, or pretences of elections, serving nevertheless to no purpose, and seeming also derogatory and prejudicial to the King's prerogative royal, to whom only appertaineth the collation and gift of all bishoprics, &c."

When the time for confirmation of the Bishop by the Archbishop is fixed, a citation against opposers, if any there be, who will object to the election, is published and set up at the church where the confirmation is to be held. Such opposers, not appearing, are pronounced contumacious; but, if they appear, it seems they shall be admitted to make their exceptions in due form of law. Collier, in his Ecclesiastical History (vol. 2, p. 745) tells us, that in the reign of Charles I, Montague was promoted to the See of Chichester; but before he was consecrated "an unexpected rub was thrown in his way." One Jones, a bookseller, attended with a mob, and, "to be somewhat particular, charges him with popery, Arminianism, and other heterodoxies, for which his books had been censured in the former Parliament." But the opposition failed, because of its deficiency in matter of form.

ON THE PRACTICE IN EQUITY AS TO THE RIGHT OF A DEFENDANT TO HAVE SECURITY FOR COSTS, WHERE THE PLAINTIFF IS A FEME COVERTE.

The practice in equity with respect to the question whether, and under what circumstances, the solvency of the next friend of a feme covert plaintiff is of importance, has lately been the subject of considerable discussion; and according to the latest decision by the Lord Chancellor, (Jones v. Fawcett, 2 Phil. 278), it would seem that a distinction exists where the defendant seeks to stay proceedings in a suit in progress, on the ground that the next friend is not a person of substance; and where the plaintiff seeks to remove a next friend, with whose capability to meet costs the defendant is satisfied, and to substitute for him one who is not of ability to pay costs, if they should be awarded against him. On the former state of things the Lord Chancellor pronounces no decision in Jones v. Fawcett; on the latter he has held, that, as a feme covert plaintiff has no right to remove the existing next friend without bringing the defendant before the Court, the reason of that necessity is, that the defendant has an interest in the solvency of the party proposed as a substitute; and that the Court will see whether the defendant will be prejudiced by the proposed substitution before it will allow it to be made. His Lordship denied that the case of Dowden v. Hook (8 Beav. 399) established, or that there was any such general doctrine, as that a married woman had a right to select her next friend, without any regard to his solvency. His Lordship did not, however, deny, nor does it seem possible to deny, that Dowden v. Hook went the length of laying down the rule, that, at least, where the application is by the defendant indirectly to compel the plaintiff to change her next friend, the Court will not, on such an application, look at the question whether the next friend is capable of answering the costs or not. Whether that doctrine can be supported consistently with the case of Jones v. Fawcett remains to be examined.

It is admitted, that, before Jones v. Fawcett, there was conflict of authority on the question whether a defendant sued by a feme covert has a right to object to the next friend, on the ground that he is not of substance to answer costs. In Pennington v. Alvin (1 S. & S. 264) and Drinan v. Mannis, (3 Dru. & War. 154), both cited in Dowden v. Hook, it had been held, that the defendant might stay proceedings in a suit by a feme covert, suing by a next friend unable to answer costs, until the next friend should be changed, or security for costs given. And though Lord Langdale distinguished one of those cases (Pennington v. Alvin) from the case before him, he did not attempt to distinguish Drinan v. Mannis. There appears, therefore, to be, without doubt, on this particular point, a direct conflict of authority, and the question hereafter will be, which of the two doctrines, that of Drinan v. Mannis, or that of Dowden v. Hook, can best stand with Jones v. Fawcett. Now, if Dowden v. Hook and Jones v. Fawcett are to stand together, this consequence will follow, that a feme covert may, in the institution of a suit, impose on the defendant, as a matter of course, an irresponsible prochein ami, and he cannot get rid of such prochein ami; but that if once she gives him a responsible prochein ami, then she cannot afterwards deprive him of that advantage.

It is impossible, however, not to see, that, although, in Jones v. Fawcett, the Lord Chancellor appears to rely on the distinction between the application being by the plaintiff to remove the prochein ami, which is not of course, and on the defendant seeking to alter that which the plaintiff originally did as of course, yet the reason given for the necessity of the defendant appearing on a motion to substitute a prochein ami, shews that the substantial ground of the decision in Jones v. Fawcett is the right of the defendant to be protected in the matter of costs against the incapacity of the feme covert.

It is difficult to see any principle on which the right of the defendant to be protected should depend on the particular time when the plaintiff seeks to deprive him of such protection. Jones v. Fawcett certainly lays down no such principle. But as it does deny the existence of any general principle, that a feme covert has a general right to select at all times a prochein ami, without reference to his responsibility; and as it does rule, that, at least, where the application is by the plaintiff, the capacity of the prochein ami to answer costs is to be considered, it may be thought that the cases, in which it has been held that his capacity to answer costs, where the application is by the defendant for the protection, is to be looked at, are more consistent with Jones v. Fawcett than the decision in Dowden v. Hook. And at least, since Jones v. Fawcett, the doctrine of Dowden v. Hook can scarcely be considered as conclusively established.

The Rights and Liabilities of Husband and Wife at Law and in Equity, as affected by modern Statutes and Decisions. By JOHN FRASER MACQUEEN, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Practice of the House of Lords and Privy Council." Part I. containing Cases not affected by Settlement, and the Practice upon Acknowledgments by Married Women. 8vo. pp. 313. [Sweet.]

Mr. Macqueen cannot be accused of having here thrust his sickle into an overwrought harvest. On the contrary, the neglect of the law of husband and wife during the last twenty years by text writers in posse is remarkable. Mr. Jacob's edition of Roper was published in 1826, and Mr. Jarman's volume on Settlements appeared in 1833. (When we may look for the second edition of that volume is a question to be asked with more of indignation than of hope). Very many cases concerning the property of married women have since been decided, and not a few important questions have been settled or unsettled. In particular, we may say that the doctrine as to separate use and the restraint on anticipation has been set at rest, and that as to the disposition and reduction into possession of a wife's equitable interests, present or future, in property, personal or real, has been set afloat, subsequently to the discussion of those subjects by Mr. Jarman.

The impression produced by a cursory inspection of the present work is not favourable. An affected and illogical division of the subject, (or rather programme of it, for when the substance of the chapters is examined the arrangement is found to be better than it professes to be),—a style which is intended to be smart and epigrammatic,—a frequent criticism of decisions in a tone not forensic nor always respectful, and often on grounds of policy rather than of legal principle,—do not promise well for the completeness or soundness of a text book, though they are in keeping with the Dedication of it to "The Author of the Lives of the Chancellors."—flippancy to the flippant.

A more careful study of the work, however, discloses sterling merits beneath these blemishes. The arrangement, though unusual and defective, is not inconvenient, (and the author, by frequent references to and from the different divisions, does his best to make it intelligible),—the digressions and impertinencies, though too numerous, are very short,—the style is clear and pithy,—and, above all, the author, while endeavouring to shine, has not forgotten to labour: he compiles industriously, expounds learnedly and intelligently, and by the brevity and precision of his language makes amends for many errors in taste. Some of the legal merits of the book may, perhaps, fairly be attributed to Mr. Russell, who, it seems, has assisted the author by revising the sheets, and than whom there is no one more profoundly versed in the equitable doctrines respecting husband and wife. However ungracious the question may appear, we must ask how it is that Mr. Russell can find time for the great labour of revising a treatise, when he has no time for the small labour of revising his Notes of Decisions in Chancery in continuation of 5 Russ. 380?

The part now before us is complete in itself, comprising the whole of the law as to the rights and liabilities of married people, with respect to property and contracts unaffected by settlement. The following extract, in continuation of a statement of the general rule, that marriage entitles the husband to his wife's personal chattels in possession, may be taken as a specimen of our author's better style:—

"The phrase 'chattels personal in possession,' as 'here used, includes all movables of the wife, such as 'jewels, household goods, and the like, and cash in her 'hands.

"Whether it embraces money at her banker's may, 'perhaps, depend on a distinction first taken by Sir W. Grant, in Carr v. Carr, (1 Mer. 543, n.). He there 'says, that a balance at a banker's is a debt, and not 'a deposit; and in Foley v. Hill, (1 Phill. 399), it was 'held, that a banker, sued by a customer for payment 'of his balance, might plead the Statute of Limitations*. Such balance, therefore, is a chose in action.

"But Sir W. Grant suggested, that, if the money 'were delivered to the banker in a sealed bag, it 'would then truly be a depositum. It would, to use 'Lord Mansfield's expression, which Sir W. Grant 'adopts, have an  earmark: in other words, it would be 'a specific chattel, and as such would, I apprehend, 'vest by the marriage in the husband as his absolute 'property; for it has been long settled, that, where the 'wife's specific chattels or goods are in the hands of a 'third person, the husband may bring in his own name 'alone detinue, or replevin, or trover for them, the 'right of property being established in him exclusively 'by the marriage. Therefore, even should he die with- 'out recovering such specific chattels or goods, they 'would belong to his representative, and not to the 'wife by right of survivorship."

In a subsequent page, speaking of the wife's right by survivorship to her choses in action, Mr. Macqueen says:—

"The rule in equity, as we have seen, is that 'nothing short of actual reduction into possession by 'the husband, or his assignee, will bar the widow's

* "But see Pott v. Clegg, (11 Jur. 289), decided by the Court of Exchequer on the 1st February, 1847, where the Chief Baron throws great doubt on the position, that cash at a banker's is merely money lent. See also some remarks on Hill v. Foley, in The Jurist of the 24th April, 1847."

'right by survivorship. The decisions of courts of equity, however, in this matter proceed not on equitable, but on legal grounds; for the whole of this doctrine respecting choses in action comes from the common law. In Purdeu v. Jackson, the ruling case to which we have so often adverted, the reasoning, so far as related to the necessity of reduction into possession, was entirely legal reasoning. There is nothing equitable, or indeed very rational, in saying that the test of property shall depend upon an accident. But such being the test which the law prescribes, courts of equity have thought themselves bound to adhere to it.

"The common-law courts, however, (judging from two late examples to which I am now to direct attention,) do not appear to be so rigid. For in Gaters v. Madeley, (6 Mee. & W. 427), the right of survivorship is held by one of the learned judges (the others not dissenting) to be defeated the moment it appears that the husband in his lifetime had made an election to take the chose in action to himself, and had dissented to his wife's having any interest in it." This doctrine of election and dissent is thus unfolded by Mr. Baron Parke:—"When a chose in action, such as a bond or note, is given to a femme couverte, the husband may elect to let his wife having the benefit of it; and, if in this case the husband had in his lifetime brought an action upon this note in his own name, that would have amounted to an election to take it himself, and to an expression of dissent on his part to his wife's having any interest in it. On the other hand, he may, if he pleases, leave it as it is; and in that case the remedy on it survives to the wife; or he may, according to the decision in Phillips v. Pluckwell, (2 M. & S. 393), adopt another course, and join her name with his own; and in that case, if he should die after judgment, the wife would be entitled to the benefit of the note, as the judgment would survive to her. In Richards v. Richards, (2 B. & Adol. 447) the Court of Queen's Bench held that a promissory note was in the ordinary course of things a chose in action, and that there was nothing to take it out of the common rule that choses in action given to the wife survive to her after the death of her husband, unless he has reduced them into possession."

"Now, if we rightly understand this passage, it furnishes a new test whereby to determine a change of property in the wife's chose in action. For that change is made to depend, not on reduction into possession, but on the husband's election; which election is sufficiently manifested by his having simply brought an action in his own name alone for its recovery; because that fact, it is said, amounts to an expression of 'dissent' to his wife's having any interest in the chose in action.

"But we have seen that the original right of property to her choses in action continues in the wife undivested by the marriage. The right of property must differ from all other rights of property if it can be altered by mere transitory intention, or by inchoate proceedings on the husband's part. The learned judge refers to no authority for his proposition; which I do not find supported by any previous case at law or in equity; and which appears altogether so new and startling that I incline to think there must be some error in the report; for a very slight variation in the language would make a substantial difference in the meaning.

"From the remark at the close of the passage above quoted, it would rather appear that the learned judge meant to distinguish the case of a bill of exchange or promissory note from that of other choses in action. Negotiable securities were at one time regarded as chattels personal in possession; and though they are not now so considered, but, on the contrary, are clearly held to be choses in action, they nevertheless are at the husband's absolute disposal by indorsement as we 'have already seen. And, therefore, the bringing an action by the husband in his own name alone, to recover payment, may in the case of a bill or note have a greater effect than the same step would produce in the case of a bond or other chose in action. But the opening of the above passage is general in its scope; for it says, 'a chose in action, as a bond or note.' And unless we were to suppose that bond was a misprint for bill, there would be no ground for concluding that Mr. Baron Parke contemplated a distinction between a bill or note and any other chose in action. However, it is observable that the remarks of his Lordship were not strictly necessary for the determination of the case before the Court, which was one in which no action had been brought by the husband, and in which the judgment went in favour of the wife's right by survivorship.

"In Skerrington v. Yates, (12 Mee. & W. 855), a more recent case than Gaters v. Madeley, Chief Justice Tindal said—"There can be no doubt after the case of Gaters v. Madeley, in which all the preceding cases were considered, that a promissory note given to the wife before her marriage is a chose in action, which the husband may reduce into possession, if he thinks fit, by bringing an action thereon in the name of himself and his wife; but which, if not so reduced into possession, will survive to the wife. In case, therefore, an action had been brought in that form, if the husband had died before judgment, the right of action would have survived to the wife, who might, by entering a suggestion upon the roll of her husband's death, have prosecuted the suit to judgment for her own sole use. And even if judgment had been signed before the husband's death, but no execution levied, the benefit of the judgment would have survived to the wife."

"This seems to intimate that, if the action had been brought on the note in the name of the husband alone, the wife's survivorship would, in the opinion of the Chief Justice, have been cut off, although the husband were to die before judgment. And this upon the principle of election and dissent established by the simple fact of omitting the wife's name as a co-plaintiff in the action.

"If these dicta should be followed, it might be well to consider and define what they precisely mean. Reduction into possession is not a figure of speech; and the institution of a suit, in the husband's name alone, is not reduction into possession. Since, therefore, it is not the thing itself, it must operate (if it is to operate) as an equivalent. Then is it to be said that it shall be the only equivalent? Why should not other evidences of election and dissent be admitted? What better proof could be required than an assignment executed for valuable consideration by the husband? The evidence of election and dissent was abundant and redundant in Purdeu v. Jackson. But the able counsel by whom that case was argued (who were not likely to omit any topic calculated to benefit their client) no where suggested that the husband, by a mere expression of dissent, could put an end to the wife's legal rights of property. In Purdeu v. Jackson, however, it may be said that the chose in action was reversionary. But the reasoning on which the Court proceeded in that case, as well as in the subsequent cases already adverted to, of Ashby v. Ashby, Hutchings v. Smith, Ellison v. Elwyn, and Le Vasseur v. Scrutton, was expressly applicable to choses capable of reduction into possession at the moment of the assignment. And in Purdeu v. Jackson it was stated that nothing turned upon the circumstance of the chose being reversionary.

"On the whole, then, it would seem that the views of the common-law and equity tribunals, on this subject, are not altogether concurrent."

Mr. Macqueen investigates, with some minuteness, the anomalous doctrine which was for a long time, if it is not still, sanctioned by the Courts, that a married woman has no equity to a settlement out of her equitable chattels real. He has hunted Sir E. Turner's case to its earth in the Lords' Journals, and shews not only that it was a case of separate estate, and not of equity to a settlement; but that the decision in that case, on which that in Donne v. Hart (2 Russ. & M. 360) was professed to be founded, and the decisions in its satellites of earlier date, (Tudor v. Samyne, Pitt v. Hunt, &c.), are wholly inconsistent with the present doctrines of equity, and have been repeatedly overruled. Whether Sturges v. Champneys (5 My. & C. 97) has completely removed the difficulties introduced by Turner's case, as our author suggests, may be doubted, while Donne v. Hart remains unimpeached.

Mr. Macqueen has treated the law of dower less satisfactorily than any other division of his subject, conceiving, apparently, that the operation of the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, will, in a few years, entirely put an end to the practical importance of the title to dower. This may be doubted, for though in cases governed by the statute, dower can never be an impediment to alienation, it is a right which, in the adjustment of the claims of creditors, heirs, and devisees, may more frequently give rise to difficult questions than it could have done when the uses to prevent dower were capable of full operation.

The proposition that the dowress "is clearly liable to one-third of the duties attaching to the estate, upon which principle she must contribute her proportion to keep down interest," (p. 171), appears to us to be much too general. Upon principle it is evident, that a dowress, whether under the old or under the new law, ought not to keep down the interest on mortgages and charges to secure the husband's own debts, but is entitled to full exoneration from those charges out of the interest of the heir or devisee, for the husband's debts are primarily payable out of his assets, and the interest of the dowress is not assets, though that of the heir or devisee is. The old cases are too imperfectly reported to throw much light on the question.

We may observe, in conclusion, that the law and practice upon acknowledgments by married women, the law as to the marriage contract, and the law of divorce and the consequences of divorce, are among the subjects included in the present publication.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYEWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, JANUARY 8, 1848.

THE circumstances that have transpired with reference to the recent trial of the persons accused of the murders at Mirfield, have given rise to a fresh outburst of that public hostility to the supposed exorbitant claim of privilege on the part of the Bar, which had slept since the memorable Courvoisier trial.

It is a difficult thing to say, having regard to the functions of counsel, and the state of society which renders such a profession as that of advocate necessary at all, what ought to be the limits of their privilege; nor is it, perhaps, an easy thing to say what is the precise rule or principle adopted by the Profession on this subject; and it is much to be regretted, that, on the question of the duty, or privilege or license of counsel, whichever it may be called, in defence of a client, the Bar do not lay down and publicly state what is the rule of professional conduct. Until that is done, so that there is a known rule to which advocates can look as a guide in respect to the length to which the duty and privilege of counsel do really extend, there will continue to be from time to time some such case as that of Courvoisier, or Reid and M'Cabe, in which counsel, either from incapacity to judge where moral principle must intervene to check the eagerness of advocacy, or from mere contempt of the dictates of such principle, will adopt a course which may expose themselves and their Profession to the animadversion, and sometimes to the well-founded animadversion, of the public.

We have ourselves no manner of doubt, nor have we ever entertained any from the time when we were first led to consider the question, as to the true rule of professional conduct. And we believe it to be this; that counsel is at liberty to reason as much as he will upon the law and facts, and to influence, as far as he can, the reason of the tribunal that he addresses; but he is not at liberty to mislead it, whether it be judge or jury, upon facts. No matter how the facts come to his knowledge, whether upon the evidence, or whether by private communication;—assuming that the real facts are in his knowledge, he is, we say, not at liberty to mislead the tribunal that he addresses, upon the facts.

If he is aware of facts prejudicial to his client, he is not, indeed, bound to communicate them to the tribunal; for it is the proper business of his opponent to find out and communicate all such facts as are necessary to make out his own case. Counsel is not, therefore, bound to call witnesses, whose evidence would be against his client; nor to ask of witnesses already before the Court, questions which would bring out facts prejudicial to his client's case. In fine, he is not bound to do, for the enlightenment of the tribunal upon matters of fact, that which due diligence in his opponent would enable him to do. Nor is he bound, so far to play the part of assistant to justice, as to take the case out of the evidence that is before the tribunal, and to bring forward matter which he knows only from the communications confidentially made to him by his client. But here his privilege stops; it is not, as we have said, understood by the Bar to extend to misleading the tribunal on matters of fact. Therefore, if counsel, defending a prisoner, knows from the confidential communication made to him by his client, that he is guilty, we conceive, that though by the rule of the Profession he is not called upon in any the remotest degree to divulge such knowledge; on the other hand, he ought not to endeavour to induce the Court to receive as true any evidence, which, being inconsistent with the evidence of which he has private knowledge, he must know to be untrue. Assuming that he acts up to the rule in this, then, on the facts that are placed before the tribunal, fairly and without any attempt on his part to mislead, he may comment, for the purpose of persuading the tribunal to collect from those facts inferences that may be beneficial to his client.

It may happen that the result of persuading the tribunal to adopt those inferences, will be to cast suspicion upon others who are before it. If such a state of circumstances arises, it brings with it a difficulty; but the difficulty is quite capable of solution, by adhering to the equity of the rule which we have stated as being the true rule of professional conduct. If the evidence so brought before the Court is such as to shake the belief of the prisoner's counsel in the veracity of any part of his client's confession, then, to the extent to which he disbelieves the client and believes the evidence, he may, of course, press the inference resulting from the evidence. But if his belief in his client's confession remains entire, then to press an inference arising from facts which he knows cannot be true, is, in reality, not reasoning, but indirectly misleading on matters of fact, and counsel ought to abstain, under those circumstances, from pursuing that course.

We believe we have here stated the principle and limits of the privilege of counsel, as it is understood and used by the most eminent men at the Bar. We believe there is no such rule as that a barrister is bound to do, as it is sometimes expressed, "the best he can for his client," irrespectively of all considerations, except that of winning the cause; and we are satisfied, from some not inattentive personal observation of the mode in which the leading counsel in the highest departments of business transact their business, that they act upon no such rule.

The rule, as we have stated it, is, perhaps, far from satisfactory, if viewed with the eye of the divine or the moralist; but it must be recollected, that litigation is not the offspring of the perfection, but of the imperfection of human nature. It is war, civilised war, it is true, but still war, and as war it must be conducted. Being civilised war, it may, and, according to the true practice of the Bar, ought to be conducted subject to certain honourable regulations. But while we defend the Bar against the imputations sometimes cast upon it, of utterly unscrupulous struggling for the success of one's client without regard to truth or honour; on the other hand, we must equally protest against that sentimental and mock morality, which would call upon men professedly standing up as champions of their respective clients, in a professed conflict sanctioned by the law, and necessary only because society is still semibarbarous, to convert themselves from champions into judges.

But it may be said, that all that we have been laying down is very pretty theory, but that it still remains to be shewn what should be done in practice in such cases as those of Courvoisier, and of Reid and M'Cabe. Our answer is, that the practice will flow naturally from the theory. In such a case as that of Courvoisier, we conceive that the proper practice would be, for the prisoner's counsel to watch rather than to act. To take care that no evidence was admitted against his client but under the strictest scrutiny; to use every technical defence in his power; to take care, in fact, that his client should not be convicted, except strictly according to law. It certainly would not be, in such a case, the duty of counsel to suggest any facts inconsistent with what in his heart he knew, from the communication made by his client, to be the only true fact. And our advice to any young counsel engaged in such a case, under such circumstances, would be, to suggest nothing; to cross-examine; to sift; to reject all evidence not strictly admissible; to take care, in fact, that the prisoner should not be found guilty unless legally he could be proved to be so, but religiously to abstain from attempting any substantive proof of his innocence.

If it be objected to this, that the effect may be to lead the jury to suspect the truth, the answer is, it cannot be helped. There is and can be no professional rule which calls upon counsel to disgrace himself by making downright misrepresentations, in order to save a miscreant from being hung. The Courvoisier case may be dismissed without more—the course in it was clear. In the recent case it was not so clear. As we understand the facts of that case, as they have been publicly stated by the counsel for the prisoner Reid, it does not appear that counsel was in possession of evidence that M'Cabe was innocent, but only of evidence that Reid was guilty. If so, it would be difficult to say that he was not justified in reasoning, from the evidence before the Court, that M'Cabe was guilty, though, according to the rule, as we have stated it, he would not be justified in pressing as a fact the exclusive guilt of M'Cabe, as that would be misleading the jury upon matters of fact. However, we are not the tribunal to sit in judgment on the course pursued by an individual, nor is it the object of this paper to do anything more than state what we believe to be the professional rule on the subject. With the conduct, therefore, of Reid's counsel we have nothing to do. But with his arguments publicly put forth we have; and as they are stated by himself in his letter, published on the 30th ult., they stretch the professional rule, in our opinion, very far beyond its true limits*.

* We insert Mr. Seymour's argument on the question of privilege, as some of our readers may not have an opportunity of referring to it.

"Assuming that to be true, which I deny, and admitting for a moment that a 'full confession' was made to me previous to the trial, which wholly exculpated M'Cabe; I am yet to learn that I would be deserving of blame for endeavouring to throw the whole guilt upon M'Cabe, if the evidence by which the jury were bound to decide, warranted such a course. I am yet to learn that this would be either morally or professionally wrong. When a counsel accepts a brief for a prisoner, he becomes, in my opinion, bound by a two-fold obligation. I esteem it, in the first place, to be his strict and solemn duty to keep faithful to his client during the trial, or pending it, and to hold his secrets as a religious trust. They are commissa fidei—they must not be violated—they must not be exposed.

"In the next place, it is equally his bounden duty to frame the best defence in his power from the evidence given at the trial. If a prisoner confesses his guilt, or makes admissions which tend to criminate him while they acquit his fellow prisoner, is his counsel to hurry into the witness-box to ruin and betray him? If not, then his confession is not in evidence; and does a counsel overstep his duty, who adopts a line of defence wholly irrespectively of that confession, but which is founded on the evidence before the jury, borne out, and justified by it? When a veto is put upon this exercise of a counsel's discretion,—when, instead of his argument being weighed

It is certainly time, however, that the general question should be set at rest, and that the Bar at large and the public should understand what are the limits of the privilege of counsel. If it be really, as the public supposes it to be claimed by the Bar, to do and say any thing and every thing to carry a client through, let it be so stated by a resolution of the Bar generally, and then men who are something above mere gladiators, will know what to do in respect to remaining in the Profession. If the rule be as we have stated and believe it to be, let us put the public in possession of that fact, that we may cease to be continually taunted and sneered at whenever a member of our body, whether from inadvertence, from eagerness, or from want of principle, oversteps the boundary of his duty.

CALLS TO THE BAR.—From a recent investigation it appears, that, during the year 1847, there were no less than 191 gentlemen called to the bar by the societies of the Middle Temple, Inner Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. Of that number, 84 were called by the Society of the Middle Temple, 53 by the Society of the Inner Temple, 40 by the Society of Lincoln's Inn, and 14 by the Society of Gray's Inn. In the year 1846 there were 174 gentlemen called to the bar by the same societies. Of that number, 78 were called by the Society of the Middle Temple, 48 by the Society of the Inner Temple, 43 by the Society of Lincoln's Inn, and 5 by the Society of Gray's Inn. From the above statement, it appears that the number of gentlemen called to the bar during the past year exceeded by 17 the number called in 1846.—The Times, Jan. 5, 1848.

LINCOLN'S INN.—At a special council there held, the 8th day of November, 1847,

RESOLVED,—That students of this Inn, having attained the age of twenty-three years, may be called to the bar after the expiration of five years from admission, twelve terms having been kept, nine exercises performed, and certificate produced of attendance on two courses of lectures. Masters of arts and bachelors of law of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, and students of this Inn, not being such graduates, but who, on their own application, are examined in law, and pass a sufficient examination, having complied with the requisitions in respect of terms, exercises, and certificate, may be called after the expiration of three years.

RESOLVED,—That the present rule do come into operation on the last day of this term, and that students admitted before that day have the option of being called to the bar, according to the regulation now in force.

RESOLVED,—That this Order be communicated to the other Inns of Court.

A copy,—M'DOYLE, Steward.

Note.—At a special council held on the 10th day of November, 1847, George Spence, Esq., Q. C., was elected Professor of Equitable Jurisprudence as administered in the Court of Chancery. M'D.

and measured by the nature of the evidence, his motives and private opinions are publicly submitted to a rigid moral test,—the relation of client and counsel will be deranged, and their mutual confidence interrupted; the independence of the Bar will be violated, and the principle of advocacy will be abolished altogether."

COUNTY COURTS. On the propriety of giving to them an equitable jurisdiction, 9 recent changes in the law which make this desirable, ib.
 instances of this, arising from the Act for shortening Conveyances and facilitating the Transfer of Real Property, ib.
 inability of the Court of Chancery to deal with the class of estates which may come into existence under the operation of this measure, ib.
 it is within the principle of the County Courts Act to take cognizance of such claims, ib.
 no objections of a practical character can be made to the creation of such a jurisdiction, 10 recent decision of the Prerogative Court on this point in the case of Frere v. Peacock, ib.

doctrine declared in that case, ib.

observations on the distinction thereon made between moral and intellectual perversion, ib.

what is meant by "insane delusion?" 147 case of Dew v. Clarke, ib.

examination of the language employed in the judgment of that case, ib.

consistently with the doctrine of this case there is no distinction between moral and intellectual perversion, ib.

argument for this position, ib.

the notion of moral insanity is not quite unknown to the law, 186 review of the authorities on this point, ib.

consideration of the question as to what are the grounds on which a judicial opinion can be formed on the state of a testator's mind, ib.

older cases on this subject, 186, 187 case of Frere v. Peacock would seem not to put the law on its true ground, 187 it would appear that there is no rule of law which constitutes intellectual delusion the only test of insanity, ib.

observations on the difference between the old and the new doctrine on this subject, ib.

remarks on what appears to be the true question to be solved in all cases of this kind, ib.

INSOLVENTS. On the applicability of the provisions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, in the case of, where they are wholly without assets, 97, 98JEWS. Observations on the capacity of a person professing the Jewish religion to sit in Parliament, 398

- REFERENCE TO ARBITRATION. On the complaints made as to sending causes, set down for trial at Nisi Prius, to, 481 the bar blamed for this, ib.
the grounds of this complaint examined, ib.
courts of law have no machinery for trying cases of account, ib.
they can only determine the rights of parties on a state of things known or assumed to be known, ib.
in cases of account this is not so, ib.
courts of law are, therefore, compelled to send the parties to a reference in order that an account may be taken between them, 482 the evil arises from suitors presenting cases to those courts which are not in a position to be disposed of by them, ib.

SEDUCTION OF DAUGHTER. On the right of a parent to bring an action for damages for, 389 the principle, although bad, does not always produce injustice, ib.
the right to sue is founded on a false assumption, ib.
effects of this, ib.
cruelty and absurdity of the law shewn by the recent case of Davies v. Williams, ib.
this case was decided correctly in point of law, ib.
but it produced a failure of justice, 390 continuance of the principle injurious, ib.
practical effect of the law, ib.
remarks on the same subject, suggested by a case which has recently appeared in the public journals, 421

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.
